A

NEW GENERAL

English Dictionary;

Peculiarly calculated for the

USE and IMPROVEMENT

Of such as are unacquainted with the

LEARNED LANGUAGES.

Wherein the Difficult Words, and Technical Terms made use of in

Anatomy,	Divinity,	Hunting,	Musick,
Architecture,	Gardening,	Husbandry,	Navigation,
Arithmetick,	Grammar,	Law,	Painting,
Algebra,	Hawking,	Logick,	Poetry,
Astronomy,	Heraldry,	Mathematicks,	Rhetorick,
Botany,	History,	Mechanicks,	Sculpture,
Chymistry,	Horsemanship,	Milit. Affairs,	Surgery, &c.

Are not only fully explain'd, but accented on their proper Syllables, to prevent a vicious Pronunciation; and mark'd with Initial LETTERS, to denote the Part of Speech to which each Word peculiarly belongs.

To which is prefixed,

A Compendious English GRAMMAR, with general Rules for the ready Formation of one Part of Speech from another; by the due Application whereof, such as understand English only, may be able to write as correctly and elegantly, as those who have been some Years conversant in the Latin, Greek, &c. Languages.

TOGETHER WITH

A SUPPLEMENT,

Of the Proper Names of the most noted

Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Rivers, &c. throughout the known WORLD.

AS ALSO

Of the most celebrated Emperors, Kings, Queens, Priests, Poets, Philosophers, Generals, &c. whether Jewish, Pagan, Mahometan, or Christian; but more especially such as are mentioned either in the Old or New Testament.

The Whole Alphabetically digested, and accented in the same Manner, and for the same Purpose, as the preceding Part; being collected for the Use of such, as have but an imperfect Idea of the English Orthography.

Originally begun by the late

Reverend Mr. THOMAS DYCHE,

School-Master at Stratford-le-Bow, Author of the Guide to the English Tongue, the Spelling-Dictionary, &c.

And now finish'd by

WILLIAM PARDON, Gent.

The EIGHTH EDITION, with the ADDITION of the several Market Towns in England and Wales; giving a general Description of the Places, their Situations, Market Days, Government, Manufactures, Number of Representatives sent to Parliament, Distance from London, both in computed and measured Miles, &c.

THE INTRODUCTION.

IN the following DICTIONARY, Derivations and Etymologies are entirely left out: First, becauſe of their Uncertainty, in a very large Number of Inſtances: And, ſecondly, upon account of their Uſeleſſneſs to thoſe Perſons that theſe Sort of Books are moſt helpful to, which are commonly ſuch, whoſe Education, Reading, and Leiſure, are bounded within a narrow Compaſs; and therefore ſuch Helps and Hints, as were judged more univerſally beneficial, are ſubſtituted in their Room; of which, take the following Account.

1. The Word itſelf is followed by a Capital Letter, included within a Parentheſis ( ) ſignifying what Part of Speech the Word is; and becauſe there are but three Parts that make any Variation in their Terminations, &c. that is, Nouns Subſtantives, Nouns Adjectives, and Verbs, the four other Parts, which by the Generality of Grammarians are called Adverbs, Conjunctions, Prepoſitions, and Interjections, are here called by one general Name of Particles; and then follows the Definition or Meaning of the Word in the ſeveral Acceptations or Uſes it is applied to. And here you are to note, that a great Number of Words are purpoſely omitted, purely to make Room for many uſeful, ſhort, and beneficial Abſtracts from large Treatiſes, upon the Manners and religious Cuſtoms of the Ancients, as well Jews as Gentiles; as alſo the various Sects of Chriſtians, likewiſe in Philoſophy, &c. But leſt ſuch Omiſſion ſhould be thought a Defect, it is here intended to explain and ſhew how the Reader may, with Eaſe, ſupply the ſame; which, when duly conſidered, will plainly prove a very conſiderable Advantage, by making Room for more uſeful Matter. And here it is to be obſerved, that from the Infinitive Mood Active of most Engliſh Verbs, the Subſtantive importing the Action is formed, by adding the Termination ing; as, to Trumpet, Trumpeting; to Drink, Drinking, &c. and therefore ſuch derivative Words are frequently omitted, and vice versâ, ſometimes inſerted and the Verb left out; but leſt the Reader ſhould forget, or take no Notice of this Obſervation, it is alſo frequently inſerted. Again, where the Verb and the Subſtantive are the ſame Word, ſometimes the one, and ſometimes the other is omitted, upon a Suppoſition, that the Reader will obſerve the Diſtinction made in the following ſhort Eſſay of Grammar, between a Verb and a Subſtantive; and that when he underſtands the Meaning of the one, he will apply it to the other; as in the Words Truſt, Tin, &c. the Subſtantives are inſerted, and the Verbs omitted; and in the Words Swoon, Stride, &c. the Verbs are ſet down, and the Subſtantives left out; and almoſt univerſally the participial Adjectives are omitted, becauſe whenever the Meaning of the Verb is known, the Meaning of ſuch Words is alſo known; as Sprain, Sprained; Melt, Melted, &c. though they are now and then inſerted to try the Reader's Ability, and to ſhew what a natural Dependence they have upon one another; ſo that if a Perſon looks for a Word, and finds it not directly, he will hardly miſs finding ſomething relative thereto, by which he will eaſily be ſatisfied in the Meaning of what he looks for; as, ſuppoſe he looked for the Word Scoring, this I cannot find, but the Subſtantive Score, which is the Thing made by the Act of Scoring, is there, and ſo is the Verb Score, importing the Performance of that Act; from whence, conſidering the Circumſtance of the Inquiry, I may receive Satisfaction in the Meaning of the Term, though it is not there expreſſed, &c. In the next Place, the Words explained are accented, to ſhew which Syllable the Force of the Pronunciation lies on; in which you are to obſerve, that Monoſyllables, or Words of one Syllable, are not marked, for this Reaſon, becauſe where there is only a ſingle Vowel in the Middle of the Word, it is immediately followed by a Liquid, or Semi-Vowel, or elſe is ended by an E mute, on purpoſe to draw out the foregoing Vowel long: And leſt any of our Readers ſhould be ignorant of what Liquids are, let them take Notice, that the Letters L, M, N, and R, are ſo called. As for Example, Arm, Babe, Cart, Dim, &c. And, as in ſo numerous a Collection, as muſt neceſſarily be in a Work of this Nature, it is next to impoſſible, but there muſt be ſeveral Miſtakes in ſo critical a Matter, either from the Inadvertence of the Author, or Neglect of the Printer;

Printer; it was therefore thought proper to insert here [illegible] Rules, both for the true dividing Words into their component Syllables, and also to shew upon which to accent the Words they compose: And here, first, it is to be observed, that any two Vowels meeting and sounding together, are called Diphthongs, and three, Triphthongs; as, Good, Beau, &c. but where they are not sounded together, or do not make a Diphthong, they must be parted, as, ie, iu, ua, in Qui-et, Tri-umph, Usu-al, &c.

2. Those Consonants that are actually doubled in the Middle of a Word, must be parted; as, But-ter, Scol-lop, &c. unless they be Words of one Syllable, where the Consonant is doubled more for Distinction sake, and to make the Sound the fuller, than from absolute Necessity; as in the Word Ann, a Woman's Name, Inn, a House of Entertainment for Travellers, &c. to distinguish them from the Particles an, meaning one of a Sort, and in, the Situation or Place of a Thing; as, Ann had an Image in the Inn, &c.

3. When a Consonant comes between two Vowels, it is generally to be joined to the latter; as, I-mage, a-bate, &c.

4. Any two or three Consonants that are proper to begin Words, must not be parted in the Middle; as, Chur-ches, be-troth, com-plain, en-throne, &c.

5. In Words of many Syllables, the Accent lies generally upon the third Vowel from the last; as in Condemnation, I'dolize, &c. but in Words that end in ary, the Accent lies upon the first Syllable, though it be not the third Vowel from the last; as, Témporary; and if these Words are compounded, in such compound Words the Accent keeps its Place of the first Syllable in the original Word; as in Ordinary, Extraordinary, Témporary, Co-témporary, &c. Again, Nouns have their Accents on the first Syllable, and Verbs on the last, when the Terms by which they are expressed are alike; as, ábsent, not at, or in a Place or Company, and ab-sént, to keep away voluntarily, &c. And though these Rules and Observations are very extensive and useful, yet it cannot possibly be supposed there are no Exceptions from them, to insert all which would be not only very tedious, but also needless; for as all Nations and People differ in Particularities of Speech, so in this the English differ from almost all the World; nay, the Southern Parts of this Kingdom differ very much from the Northern; so that it must be from the Conversation with the most learned and polite Persons, that Observations must be drawn to supply those Defects, that all the Rules and written Directions in the World cannot prevent, as may eaſily appear to any Perſon who has endeavoured to acquire the French Tongue by Books only, who, though never ſo great a Critick in the Orthography and Syntax, will never be able to pronounce intelligibly to a Native; though at the ſame Time he may be capable of writing, reading, and explaining that Language, with the utmoſt Exactneſs and Clearneſs. As for the following Grammar, it is intended only as a general Hint or Specimen, and not as a critical Treatiſe upon that Subject; yet I doubt not, but if carefully attended to, eſpecially with the Aſſiſtance of a Maſter, thoſe Perſons that never learnt any Thing but Engliſh, may as correctly diſtinguiſh one Part of Speech from another, and write as good Senſe, and coherently, as though they had employed a great deal of Time in learning in the common Methods, Latin, &c.

6. The Catalogue, or Alphabet of Names, at the End, is inſerted purely for the Sake of inſtructing the leſs Knowing, in the Spelling and Pronunciation of ſuch Names or Words, as are not contained in the Dictionary. The Whole is intended for the Information of the Unlearned, and particularly recommended to thoſe Boarding-Schools, where Engliſh only is taught, as is the Caſe commonly among the Ladies, by a careful Uſe whereof I doubt not but the Teachers will ſoon find the Benefit from the Improvement their Scholars will inſenſibly make, not only in Orthography, or true Spelling, but in Writing coherently and correctly, the Want whereof is univerſally complained of among the Fair Sex.

A COMPENDIOUS

Engliſh Grammar.

GRAMMAR is that Art or Science that teaches Perſons the true and proper Uſe of Letters, Syllables, Words and Sentences, in any Language whatever. And though ſuch particular Rules and Obſervations, as are immediately applicable to one Speech or Tongue, are different from thoſe of another, according to the Mode or Idiom of Speech they are applied to, yet ſo far as they regard the general Relation, that Things have to their Modes, Qualities, Motions or Paſſions, all the Languages in the World are exactly the ſame; for whatever is a Subſtantive, Verb, &c. in one Language, is the ſame in any other, though expreſſed in different Terms or Words. From whence may eaſily be perceived the Falſity of that vulgar Error among the Generality of People, viz. that young Perſons are neceſſitated to learn the Latin, or Lilly's Grammar, to underſtand Engliſh, that is, to ſpell according to the modern Manner of the beſt Orthographiſts, and write coherently and intelligently according to the Uſe and Phraſeology of the moſt celebrated Authors; For all Grammars of the Latin Tongue are moſtly employed to teach the various Terminations, &c. of the Flexions, Modes, Formations, and Words of that Language, a Matter the Engliſh is no ways concerned in. But there are indeed ſome few general Rules and Definitions in that, as there muſt be in all other Grammars, which may be univerſally applied to all Languages, as well Engliſh as any other. I ſhall not here enter into a critical Diſſertation of each Letter, their Power, Formation, &c. nor divide them into Vowels, Conſonants, Mutes, Liquids, &c. neither ſhall I divide the Language into eight Parts or Diſtinctions, as is generally done; but into four only, that being ſufficient for my preſent Purpoſe, which is only to give a general Hint how Grammar may be as effectually applied to the Engliſh Tongue as to any others.

Nor ſhall I enter into all the Niceties that may be ſtarted relating to theſe four Parts, intending here only a general Direction to know the Coherence between, and Dependence of one Part of a Diſcourſe or Speech on another. And in order to comply with common Cuſtom, as far as poſſibly I can, I ſhall call theſe four Parts by the received Names of a Noun Subſtantive, a Noun Adjective, a Verb, and a Particle. By a Noun Subſtantive, I mean the plain ſimple Name of any material or ideal Subſtance or Thing, upon the Pronunciation whereof an Idea is excited in the Mind of the Hearer what Species of Beings or Things are then intended, without Regard to any inherent or accidental Qualities or Modes that may immediately reſult from, or belong to that particular Creature or Thing then ſignified; only obſerve, that thoſe Names or Words that import the whole Species are called Nouns Subſtantives Common, the other Proper: As, when I ſay a Man, the Hearer immediately knows I intend one of the human Species; but if I ſay, Peter, John, &c. he knows that ſome particular Perſon is meant; but whether he be a tall, or a ſhort Man, a black, or a white Man, a crooked, a ſtraight, a learned, or an ignorant one, &c. he cannot by ſuch bare Nomination poſſibly imagine; and therefore it is abſolutely neceſſary ſome peculiar Characteriſtick ſhould be ſpecified, which is ſome diſtinguiſhing Mode or Quality. And this Mode or Quality is what is called a Noun Adjective, under which Denomination all Manner of Modes or Qualities are expreſſed, ſuch as tall, ſhort, black, white, fair, foul, beautiful, ugly, learned, ignorant, ſweet, ſtinking, rough, ſmooth, &c. The peculiar Property of theſe Sort of Words, which are called Adjectives, is, that till they are joined to one or more Subſtantives, they leave the Senſe imperfect and undetermined, which, together with what is called the Degrees of Compariſon, diſtinguiſh them from Subſtantives: For though there may be two or more Subſtantives that have the ſame general Nature, Mode, or Quality, yet they differ, and are diſtinguiſhed by the one's being better or worſe, &c. fairer or fouler, ſweeter or ſourer, &c. than the other; and by putting the Termination er, or eſt, to the Generality of Words, any Engliſh Perſon will immediately, by their Ear, determine whether it is agreeable to the Nature of the Language, to admit of ſuch a Formation; and if it does, they may then aſſuredly know that Word is that Part of Speech called an Adjective, and that ſome Quality or Mode of ſome Subſtance or Subject is deſigned by ſuch Term or Word, and not the Subſtance or Subject itſelf; as for Example, fair, fairer, faireſt; ſweet, ſweeter, ſweeteſt; tall, taller, talleſt; ſtrong, ſtronger, ſtrongeſt, &c. are Adjectives, by which the Mode or Quallity of ſome Subſtance or Subject, and not the Subſtance itſelf is intended. It is alſo to be noted, that Subſtantives are particular to one Thing or Species only; but Adjectives are univerſal, and may as well be applied to Beaſts, Trees, Flowers, &c. as Men; as, one Horſe, Dog, Tree, &c. may be ſwifter, taller, ſweeter, &c. than another; as well as one man may be taller, &c. than another. There are ſome few Variations from this general Rule of Formation and Diſtinction, of which Notice ſhall be taken hereafter.

The

The third general Head is the Verb, under which Term, the Exiſtence, Action, or Paſſion of the Subject is affirmed, and which it is uſual to call by different Appellations; ſuch as a Verb Subſtantive, a Verb Active, a Verb Paſſive, and, again, to ſubdivide theſe into Deponents, Neuters, &c. But I ſhall only inform the Reader, that where-ever, in the following Dictionary, he finds the Letter (V.) ſtanding after any Word, it ſignifies the Word ſo marked to be a Verb; and then for the Truth of the Aſſertion, he has nothing more to do but to conſider whether the Being, Action, or Paſſion of ſomething is, or is not ſignified by ſuch Word; and if he is not ſufficiently acquainted or accuſtomed with ſuch Words or Reflexions, let him read the Definition adjoined, and he will immediately determine, whether the Mark or Signature is right or wrong. And this is the more requiſite to be done, becauſe that there are ſome Inſtances when the Word itſelf ſimply and unapplied may mean any of the three Parts of Speech, that is, it may be a Subſtantive, an Adjective, or a Verb; as the Word CALM ſometimes ſignifies Subſtantively, and imports the Abſence or Ceſſation of Storms, and ſometimes the Want of a due Degree of Wind at Sea, &c. Sometimes, Adjectively, it ſignifies a ſerene or quiet Mind, State, or Condition; and ſometimes, Verbally, to appeaſe, ſettle, or quiet Rage, Paſſion, Storms, &c. But in general, the Words are as diſtinct as the Ideas intended; as, The black Horſe runs. The Common-Sewer ſtinks. The young Child cries, &c. Here black, common, and young are Adjectives, as expreſſing ſome Mode or Quality of their Subjects or Subſtantives, Horſe, Sewer, and Child; and the Words runs, ſtinks, and cries, are Verbs, denoting the ſeveral Actions of their Subjects or Subſtantives. The fourth Claſs of Words, I call by the general Name of Particles, which are occaſionally uſed to make the Senſe of the Speaker more full, clear, and intelligible, by expreſſing the Manner or other Circumſtances of the other Words, either by connecting or joining them together, or ſhewing the Manners or Qualities of them; as John and Mary ſtrive earneſtly; here and, earneſtly, are Particles; and, joining the two Subſtantives, John, Mary; earneſtly, ſhewing the Mode of their ſtriving or endeavouring to accompliſh their Intentions. And where you find theſe Words in the Dictionary, you will find them marked (Part.) to the others you find (S.) for Subſtantive; (A.) for Adjective; and (V.) for Verb.——Thus far for the general Definitions, to which may be proper to add the following Obſervations.

A Subſtantive has what is called two Numbers, the one expreſſing only ſome one ſingle Thing of a Sort or Species, the other all above one, viz. two, three, twenty, a thouſand, &c. and this is called the Plural Number. The Singular Number is commonly diſtinguiſhed by a, an, or one; as, a Horſe, a Man, a Tree, an Image, one Child, one Wife, &c. The Plural Number is generally known by the Words terminating with an s, or es; but the Singular never but in ſuch Words as have only a Plural Termination, though they have a Singular Meaning; as, Arm, Arms: Babe, Babes: Coin, Coins: Damſel, Damſels:

Damſels: Ear, Ears: Fox, Foxes: Garter, Garters: Horſe, Horſes: Inn, Inns: King, Kings: Lady, Ladies: Maſk, Maſks: Nut, Nuts: Onion Onions: Pipe, Pipes: Quarter, Quarters: Robe, Robes: Stone, Sones: Tile, Tiles: Vine, Vines: Wheel, Wheels: Year, Years, &c. There are ſome few Exceptions to this General Rule, but they are but few in Compariſon of what comply hereto: ſuch as Ox, Oxen: Man, Men: Woman, Women: Chick, Chicken: Brother, Brethren: Cow, Cows or Kine: Sow, Sows or Swine: Louſe, Lice: Mouſe, Mice: Gooſe, Geeſe: Foot, Feet: Tooth Teeth: Die, Dice: Penny, Pence, &c. Thoſe Singulars which end in f or fe, have their Plurals ending in ves; as Wife, Wives: Calf, Calves: Sheaf, Sheaves: Half, Halves: Leaf, Leaves: Loaf, Loaves: Shelf, Shelves: Self, Selves: Knife, Knives: Wolf, Wolves: Thief, Thieves: Life, Lives. And though moſt Words, whoſe Singular ends in ff, follow the general Rule aforegoing, as Muff, Muffs, &c. yet Staff makes Staves, according to the latter Rule. Some few terminate alike in both Numbers, as one Sheep, ten Sheep; one Swine, ten Swine, &c. There are ſome Words that admit of no Singular Termination or Number, ſuch as Annals, Alps, Aſhes: Bowels, Bellows, Breeches: Calends, Creſſes: Goods, Entrails, Ides, Lungs, Mallows, Nones, Sciſſars, Snuffers, Shears, Tongs, &c. And, on the contrary, there are a great many without the Plural Number or Termination; ſuch as Proper Names of Men, Women, Places, Creatures, and Things; as alſo their Virtues, Vices, Habits, and abſtract Qualities; the Generality of Grains, Spices, Herbs, Drugs, and Liquids; as Wheat, Rye, Barley, &c. Pepper, Ginger, Mace, &c. Graſs, Madder, Rue, &c. Cochineal, Indigo, &c. Air, Blood, Choler, Milk, &c.

The Latin and Greek Tongues, &c. have Caſe, Declenſion, and Gender abſolutely neceſſary to be learnt and conſidered, becauſe the Adjective varies its Termination, or Ending, to be agreeable to the Subſtantive to which it is to be annexed; but it is not ſo in the Engliſh, which, to prevent all Confuſion, has the different Sex of the Subſtantive generally expreſſed by a particular and quite different Epithet: So that any one that knows the Meaning of the Word can immediately diſtinguiſh, whether it be a Male or Female; and which among us is regarded little farther, than among thoſe Creatures that Nature has viſibly diſtinguiſhed. In Conformity to common Cuſtom, the Male ſhall be called the Maſculine Gender, and the Female the Feminine Gender, and Things without Life the Neuter Gender; and theſe are alſo diſtinguiſhed by the Terms he, his, or him, for the Maſculine; ſhe, hers, &c. for the Feminine; and it for the Neuter; but the Adjective remains the ſame, and is as applicable to Males as Females, and alſo to Things without Life, called Neuters; as, a good Boy, a good Girl, a fat Boar, a fat Sow, a kind Uncle, a kind Aunt, &c. a good Knife, &c. Some few Feminines are formed by changing the Termination of the Maſculines into eſs, ſuch as theſe following, Abbot, Abbeſs; Actor, Actreſs; Adulterer, Adultereſs; Ambaſſador, Ambaſ-

Ambaſſadreſs; Count, Counteſs; Duke, Dutcheſs; Elector, Electreſs; Emperor, Empreſs; Governor, Governeſs; Heir, Heireſs; Jew, Jeweſs; Lion, Lioneſs; Marquis, Marchioneſs; Maſter, Miſtreſs; Prince, Princeſs; Prior, Prioreſs; Patron, Patroneſs; Poet, Poeteſs; Prophet, Propheteſs; Shepherd, Shepherdeſs; Tutor, Tutoreſs; Viſcount, Viſcounteſs. There are alſo three Diſtinctions called Perſons, by which every Subſtantive is further diſtinguiſhed, viz. I, the firſt; thou, the ſecond; ſhe, he, it, the third, for the Singular Number; and we, ye, you, they, thoſe, for the Plural; to which may be added, who, whom, or what. That theſe Diſtinctions are abſolutely neceſſary, appears from the Nature of Speech, which is always employed about the Perſon or Perſons, then immediately ſpeaking, denoted by the Characteriſtick, I or we; the Perſon or Thing ſpoken to, denoted by thou, ye, or you; or the Perſon or Thing ſpoken of, denoted by he, ſhe, it, they, &c. and this to be underſtood when they ſtand before a Verb; as, I write, thou writeſt, he writeth, &c. but in compound Sentences, and after Verbs, they are changed into me, thee, him, &c. as, I can prove the Horſe belongs to me, thee, &c. The Noun Adjective in Engliſh is the ſame in both Numbers; as, a good Man, ten good Men, &c. and can never make the Senſe compleat, without the Addition at leaſt of one Subſtantive to determine what the Quality is to be underſtood of; as, tall, ſhort, good, bad, &c. have no Meaning till they are applied; as, a tall Man, Child, Woman, Tree, &c. When two Subſtantives are compounded into one Word, the firſt becomes an Adjective; as, Sea-Fiſh, River-Fiſh, Gold-Cup, Silver-Spoon. My, thy, her, our, your, their, are called Perſonal Poſſeſſives, and uſed when they are immediately joined to Subſtantives; as, This is my Houſe, Coat, Book, &c. but when the Subſtantive is not immediately expreſſed, but underſtood, or a Queſtion is aſked, they are changed into the Terms mine, thine, hers, yours, theirs; as, This Knife is mine: That is, This Knife is my Knife. Whoſe Knife is this? Mine, or it is my Knife, &c. To an Adjective belongs alſo an Increaſe or Diminution of the Value, Goodneſs or Virtue of the Subſtantive to which it is adjoined; and theſe generally are formed by adding er or eſt, to the plain ſimple Word itſelf; as, fair, fairer, faireſt, though ſometimes the middle Term is made by retaining the firſt, with the Addition, mere; as inſtead of fairer, we ſay ſometimes more fair; but this is not ſo elegant as the former; ſo inſtead of faireſt, moſt, very or exceeding fair, is ſometimes uſed; and here Reading and Obſervation will quickly make any Perſon a Judge where to introduce it in the moſt advantageous Place. Theſe four following are irregular; good, better, beſt; bad or ill, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; much, more, moſt.

Inſtead of the various Terminations and Declenſions of the Latins, &c. the Engliſh uſe a or the, of, to, by, from, or with, &c. to diſtinguiſh the ſeveral Circumſtances of the Subject, both when it is alone, and alſo when it is joined with the Adjective in both Numbers; as,

We have already taken Notice that the third Claſs of Words, is the Verb, and what its Office is; we ſhall only here obſerve, that it has two Numbers, Time, and Perſon belonging to it, by which the Being, Action, or Paſſion of the Subject or Subſtantive is declared or affirmed; for the expreſſing the true State of Time, there is what are uſually called auxiliary Verbs, from or by which the Times of other Verbs are expreſſed, there being only the preſent and the paſſing Time naturally ariſing from the different Endings of the Verbs themſelves; that is, the preſent and the paſſing, or paſt Time; as love the preſent, and lov'd or loved the paſſing Time. The preſent Time, or the Inſtant in which any Thing is actually performing, &c. is diſtinguiſhed by the Words do, doſt, or doth, for the Singular Number; and do only for the Plural, with the proper perſonal Signs, I, thou, he, we, ye, they, &c. The paſſing Time is an imperfect Manner of expreſſing, and intimates ſo much, having the Sign did, or the Termination ed: The paſt Time ſhews the Action compleat, by affirming ſomething with the Sign have; there is alſo what is called the Preterpluperfect Tenſe, and has the Sign had affixed to it; the other is the Future Tenſe that affirms ſomething ſhall or will be hereafter. And though there are really but three proper Diſtinctions of Time, viz. the Preſent, the Paſt, and the Future; yet as our Language, as well as others, have various Terminations or Manners of Expreſſion, we ſhall inſert them; as to the Diſtinctions of what is commonly called Moods, it is undeniably certain that they may be denominated as variouſly, and be as numerous as the particular Circumſtances require.

As what is called the Potential and Subjunctive Moods, are an undeniable Proof of differing only by ſome accidental Signs; for which Reaſon they are not here enumerated, but called the 1ſt, 2d, 3d, and 4th Mood. The firſt declaring or making ſome poſitive Aſſertion about, or relating to the Subject or Subſtantive. The ſecond having only one Tenſe and five Perſons, and is employed wholly about commanding or ordaining, praying or permitting ſomeſomething to be done without any Specification of Time. The third may be variouſly circumſtanced, according as it has its Expletives adjoined. And the fourth expreſſes the Action barely and indefinitely as to Time. The two auxiliary Verbs ſupply all others, with thoſe Tenſes or Times which they naturally have no proper Termination or Diſtinction for, viz. to have, by whoſe Aſſiſtance all Active Verbs are formed, or ſuch as import doing ſomething; and to be, from which all Paſſive Verbs are formed, that is, ſuch as import Suffering or Bearing ſomething done to the Subject.

3*d* Mood.

I, thou, he, ſhe, &c. may, can, might, could, &c. love.

4*th* Mood.

To love, loving, &c.

From what has been ſaid, it is obſervable, that the natural Formations are made ſucceſſively, thus: Firſt, ſomething is affirmed by the firſt Perſon Singular; as, I love, then I loved, or did love, then I have, or had loved; and afterwards ſhall or will love. But there are ſome Verbs that are irregular, and inſtead of ending in ed, in the 2d and 3d Tenſes, have particular Endings of their own; as, I bear, I bore, I have born; I beat, I have beaten; I begin, I have begun; I behold, I have beheld; I bend, I have bent; I beſeech, I have beſought; I bid, I bad, I have bid, or bidden; I bind, I have bound; I bite, I have bitten; I blow, I blew, I have blown; I bleed, I have bled; I breed, I have bred; I bring, I have brought; I break, I broke, I have broken; I am born, I was born, I have been born; I buy, I have bought; I catch, I have caught; I chide, I chid, I have chidden; I chooſe, I choſe, I have choſen; I come, I came, I am come; I cleave, I clove, I have cloven; I cut, I have cut; I creep, I crope, or crept, I have crept; I crow, I crew; I dare, I durſt; I deal, I dealt; I do, I did, I have done; I draw, I drew, I have drawn; I dream, I dreamt; I drink, I drank, I have drunk; I drive, I drove, I have driven; I do eat, I did eat, I have eaten; I fall, I fell, I am fallen; I feed, I fed; I feel, I felt; I do fetch, I did fetch; I fight, I have fought; I find, I found; I fling, I flung; I fly, I flew, I am flown; I fly, I fled, I am fled; I forget, I forgot, I have forgotten; I get, I got; I give, I gave, I have given; I go, I went, I am gone; I grind, I ground; I grow, I grew, I am grown; I hang, I hung, I have hanged; I hear, I heard; I hide, I hid, I have hidden; I hold, I held; I keep, I kept, I know, I knew, I have known; I lead, I led; I learn, I learnt; I leave, I left; I lend, I lent; I do let, I did let, I have let; I lie, I have lain; I lye, I lyed; I loſe, I loſt; I make, I made; I mean, I meant; I meet, I met; I miſs, I miſt or miſſed; I owe, I have owed; I do, I did, I have put; I do, I did, I have read; I ride, I rid, I have ridden; I ring, I rung; I riſe, I roſe, I am riſen; I do, did, have run; I ſay, I ſaid; I ſee, I ſaw, I have ſeen; I ſeek, I ſought; I ſell, I ſold; I ſend, I ſent; I do, I did, I have ſhed; I ſhine, I ſhone; I ſhoe, I ſhod; I ſhoot, I ſhot; I ſhrink, I ſhrunk; I ſing, I ſang or ſung; I ſit, I ſat or ſate; I ſlay, I ſlew, I have ſlain; I ſleep, I ſlept; I ſlide, I ſlid; I ſling, I ſlung; I ſmell, I ſmelt; I ſmite, I ſmote, I have ſmitten; I ſpeak, I ſpoke, I have ſpoken; I ſpend, I ſpent; I ſpill, I ſpilled or ſpilt; I ſpin, I ſpun; I ſpit, I have ſpit or ſpitten; I do, did, or have ſpread; I ſpring, or ſprung; I ſpit, or ſpat; I ſow, I ſowed, I have ſown; I ſtand, I ſtood; I ſting, I ſtung; I ſtrike, I ſtruck, I have ſtricken; I ſtring, I ſtrung; I ſwear, I ſwore, I have ſworn; I do or did ſweat, I have ſweated; I ſweep, I ſwept; I ſwim, I ſwam, I have ſwum; I take, I took, I have taken; I teach, I taught; I tear, I tore, I have torn; I tell, I told; I think, I thought; I thrive, I throve, I have thriven; I throw, I threw, I have thrown; I tread, I trod, I have trodden; I underſtand, I underſtood; I weave, I wove, I have weaved; I weep, I wept; I win, I won; I am, I was, I have been willing; I work, I wrought; I wring, I wrung; I write, I wrote, I have written.

The fourth Part is univerſally here called Particles, under which Denomination, all thoſe ſmall Words that tie or unite the others together, or that expreſs the the Modes or Manners of Words are ſignified, and which uſually, by the common Grammarians, are called Adverbs, Conjunctions, Prepoſitions, and Interjections. From the due Uſe and Connexion of theſe four Parts, are formed Sentences; and from a Number or Multitude of Sentences, ariſe regular Diſcourſes, Speeches, &c. A Sentence conſiſts of three Words at leaſt, by which ſome Idea of the Mind is expreſſed; as Lying is hateful. And this is called a ſimple Sentence, wherein the Subſtantive is expreſſed but once, and ſomething is affirm'd of that Subject; firſt, its Being, and next its Mode of Being, or elſe ſome Action of the Subject paſſes upon another, or at leaſt is underſtood ſo to do. All others are compound, wherein either the ſame Subject or Subſtantive is repeated, or different ones affirmed ſomething of, &c. The Subſtantive ordinarily is placed before the Verb, and is always really expreſſed or underſtood ſo to be; as, John loves Mary. And here it muſt always be obſerved, that the ſame Number and Perſon, that the Subſtantive, whoſe Action or Paſſion is intended or expreſſed by the Verb, is, the ſame muſt the Verb itſelf be; as in the Example above, the Subſtantive, John, is the third Perſon Singular, and ſo is the Verb, loves: And in the following Sentence, Men love your Wives; the Subſtantive Men is the ſecond Perſon Plural, ſo is the Verb. We admire Learning; here We is the firſt Perſon Plural, and the Verb admire, is ſo alſo; which is to be obſerved of all others.

NEW GENERAL

English Dictionary.

AAR ABA

A Is the first letter of the alphabet in almost all the known languages of the world, the pronunciation whereof is free and open, tho' most nations, and particularly the English, vary in the sounding it, sometimes open, and sometimes close, as in the words all and take It has been observed, that A is the first sound nature puts forth, at the crying and smiling of infants; and that it needs no other motion to form it, but the simple opening of the lips; and further, that upon all sudden and extraordinary occasions we are naturally led to it, to express our admiration, joy, anguish, aversion, sense of danger, &c. It is also frequently wrote at the beginning of many words, where there is no real use for it, as in arise, abide, abate, &c. which have exactly the same meaning when they are wrote or spoke, without it, as rise, bide, bate, &c. Among the ancient Romans, it was one of their numerals, and signified 500; with a dash over the head, thus, $\bar{A}$, 5000. Among us at this day, it is a particle that signifies unity, or one, as a man is one man, &c. In the Calendar, it is used as the first of the Dominical or Sunday letters. It is sometimes used as an abbreviation of mens names, &c. so A. often stands for Anno, A. D. Anno Domini, or in the year of our Lord; sometimes A. stands for Artium, as A. M. Artium Magister, or Master of Arts, A. B. Bachelor of Arts, &c.

$\bar{A}$, or AA, or $\bar{a}$ or aa, is now commonly restrained to physical prescriptions, in which it signifies ana, or an equal quantity of the several simples or medicines to be compounded, whether the particular quantities be expressed, or left to the direction of the person who is to prepare them.

AA'RON (S.) a man's name, brother to Moses, and first chief or high priest among the Jews; in the original Hebrew, this word signifies sometimes a mountain, sometimes a teacher or instructor, and sometimes an ark or holy repository.

AB (S.) the eleventh month of the civil year, according to the computation of the Hebrews, and the fifth of their ecclesiastical year, which begins with Nisan. The month Ab answers to the moon of July; there are 30 days in it: Upon the first day of this month the Jews fast in commemoration of Aaron's death; and on the ninth, because on this day the temple of Solomon was burnt by the Chaldeans; and the second temple, built after the captivity, by the Romans. The Jews believe, that on this day, the persons who were commissioned to survey the land of Canaan, returned to the camp, and engaged the people in rebellion. They fast likewise upon this day, in memory of the edict published by the emperor Adrian's command, wherein they were forbid to continue in Judea, or even to look back at a distance on Jerusalem, with an intention to lament its ruin. On the 18th day of the same month they fast, because the lamp which was in the sanctuary, was that night extinguished in the time of Abaz. In Hebrew, it signifies father, from whence comes abba.

AB, at the beginning of English Saxon names, is generally a contraction of abbot or abbey; from whence it is inferred, that those places had an abbey there, or belonged to one elsewhere, as Abingdon, &c.

A'BACOT (S.) the royal cap of state formerly worn by the kings of England, in the shape of two crowns.

A'BACUS (S.) among the old Mathematicians, was a certain table smeared over, so that the schemes they drew on it might be visible; sometimes it signifies the Pythagorick, or multiplication table; so called from Pythagoras the inventor; sometimes it signifies the alphabet, or A B C, &c. The old Romans called their cupboards or buffets by this name. In Architecture, it is generally understood to be the uppermost member of the capital of a column; but some writers in that art apply this term very differently.

ABA'DDON (S.) a name which St. John in the Revelations gives to the king of the locuſts, an infernal angel, which is called the deſtroyer, &c. therefore one of the names of ſatan or the devil.

ABA'FT (Part.) in the Sea Language, ſignifies that part of the ſhip, which is toward the ſtern, and is the ſame with aft.

ABAI'SANCE (S.) reſpect paid to any perſon, by a genteel bowing of the body; it is ſometimes wrote obeyſance.

ABA'NDON (V.) to forſake, caſt off, divorce, diſinherit; likewiſe to give one's ſelf up to the governance of any prevailing or darling paſſion; it likewiſe ſignifies to give any thing over for loſt, without all hopes of recovery.

ABA'NDONER (S.) the perſon that abandons, forſakes, &c.

ABARTICULA'TION (S.) in Anatomy, is that natural and curious conſtruction of the bones, whereby they readily and eaſily perform their ſeveral functions, by a due motion of the whole ſyſtem, or its particular parts, as in the hand, leg, &c.

ABA'SE (V.) to humble, or bring any thing down, to ſubject one's ſelf to another; at Sea, it ſignifies to ſtrike, take in, or lower the flag, in token of ſubmiſſion, or yielding to an enemy.

ABA'SED (A.) in Heraldry, is when the tip or angle of the wings of eagles, &c. looks down towards the point of the ſhield, or when the wings are ſhut, the natural bearing being to have them ſpread pointing to the chief; ſo a chevron, a pale, a bend, &c. are abaſed, when their points terminate in or below the centre of the ſhield.

ABA'SH (V.) to make aſhamed, to daſh, confound, or ſurprize.

ABA'TE (V.) to diminiſh, to make leſs; in a Law Senſe, it ſignifies ſetting aſide, overthrowing or defeating a thing, as a writ, appeal, or the like; and formerly, when applied to caſtles, it ſignified to demoliſh, beat down, or eraſe; likewiſe to enter irregularly upon lands or tenements left vacant by their former poſſeſſors, before the next heir has made good his claim, or taken poſſeſſion; in Heraldry, it is to add an accidental mark, by means whereof the coat is diſhonoured, which is ſometimes a total reverſion of the whole eſcutcheon, ſometimes only a mark of diminution, as a point dexter, a parted tenne, a goar ſiniſter, a deſ, &c.

ABA'TEMENT (S.) a diminiſhing or making leſs, either in quantity, quality, or number.

A'BBA (S.) a Syriack word uſed in Scripture, ſignifying father.

A'BBESS (S.) the governeſs or ſuperior of an abbey, or convent of nuns; and tho' the ſex hinders their performing thoſe ſpiritual functions appropriated to the prieſthood, yet there are inſtances of ſome nunneries, where the abbeſſes formerly confeſſed their nuns and performed other prieſtly offices; but their exceſſive curioſity made it neceſſary to check and lay it aſide.

A'BBEY or A'BBY (S.) a place or houſe for religious retirement, governed by an abbeſs where women are, and by an abbot where men are. Formerly here in England, and now in foreign parts, great privileges were, and are granted to them; ſuch as being exempted from the viſitation of the biſhop of the dioceſs, and allowed to be a ſanctuary for ſuch perſons as fled thither for protection againſt the law, even altho' the crime was murder. Before the reformation one third part of the beſt benefices in England were appropriated to abbies, and other religious houſes; 190 of which were diſſolved by Henry VIII. whoſe yearly revenue amounted to 2,653000*l. per Annum*, a great part of which went to Rome; the governors and governeſſes of ſeveral of the richeſt of them being foreigners, reſiding in Italy.

A'BBINGDON or A'BINGDON or A'BINGTON (S.) a handſome, well-built corporation town in Berkſhire, 46 computed and 55 meaſured miles from London; was anciently noted for its early embracing the Chriſtian religion, and its fine abbey or monaſtery, where many great men were bred; there are two churches in the town, viz. St. Helen's and St. Nicholas's; the patronage of the firſt is in the king, and of the laſt in the lord keeper; the market-houſe, which has been built of late years, is of moſt curious Aſhler workmanſhip and may challenge the pre-eminence of any in England, being built on lofty pillars, with a large hall above, in which the county aſſizes are frequently held. The town conſiſts of ſeveral ſtreets, which centre in a moſt ſpacious area, where the market is kept, which is very conſiderable, eſpecially for barley and malt. This town was made a free borough and town corporate, by charter from queen Mary I. and conſiſting of a mayor, two bailiffs, and nine aldermen, which twelve only have the right of chuſing the burgeſs, that repreſents the corporation in parliament. The market days are Mondays and Fridays, beſides which there are three fairs kept annually on the 9th of June, 25th of July, and 30th of November.

A'BBOT (S.) the chief or ſuperior of an abbey, of the male kind, who at firſt were altogether laymen, and ſubject to the biſhop and ordinary paſtors; their monaſteries being built in remote and ſolitary places, they had no ſhare in eccleſiaſtical matters, coming like other people to the pariſh church on Sundays; or if too far diſtant, had a prieſt ſent to them to adminiſter the ſacrament; but by degrees they were allowed to have prieſts of their own body, who was commonly the abbot, and extended his function no farther than his monaſtery, and that under the obedience of the biſhop: But as leiſure gave them opportunity, ſo inclination improved it, and they produced many learned men, men, who ſtrenuouſly oppoſing the growing hereſies of thoſe times, the biſhops called them from their retirements, and placed them in and near the great cities, to have better opportunities of conſulting them; by this converſation their primitive ſimplicity wore off, and the thirſt of power and exceſs of pride made them deſirous of being independent, and then they got the title of lord, with other badges of the epiſcopate, and particularly the mitre. Many diſtinctions crept in by degrees, ſuch as abbots mitred and not mitred, croſier'd and not croſier'd, œcumenical, cardinal, &c. all which are at large deſcribed by the church hiſtorians.

A'BBOTSBURY (S.) a ſmall market-town in Dorſetſhire, 106 miles from London; the royalty of this town belongs to the family of the Strangeways, who have a noble ſwannery here, a curioſity that invites abundance of ſtrangers to go and ſee it. Thurſday is its market-day; and on the 29th of June there is held an annual fair.

ABBRE'VIATE (V.) to abſtract, ſhorten, or contract into a leſſer compaſs.

ABBREVIA'TION (S.) a contraction or abridgment of a word or paſſage, by leaving out part of the letters, or ſubſtituting other marks or characters in the room of words as m. for mens, l. s. d. for Pounds, Shillings, Pence, &c.

ABBRE'VIATURE (S.) the ſame with abbreviation; alſo the mark or character made uſe of to ſignify a contraction.

ABBREUVOI'R (S.) a watering-place; in Maſonry, it is that ſpace between ſtones, called the joint, which is uſually filled up with mortar.

ABBRI'DGE (V.) to ſhorten, to contract, to take away a liberty that a perſon formerly had; to be ſaving.

ABBRO'CH (V.) in Law, is to monopolize goods, or foreſtal a market, by buying up the commodities before they come to the publick place of ſale, with an intent to retail them out again at a very advanced rate or price.

ABBU'TALS (S.) in Law, the buttings or boundings of a piece of land, expreſſing on what other lands, highways, gardens, or the like, the ſeveral extremes thereof do terminate.

A'BBY-MILTON or MILTON-A'BBAS (S.) a ſmall, mean-built market-town in Dorſetſhire, whoſe weekly market is on Monday; diſtant from London 92 computed, or 112 meaſured miles; it has a charter to hold a fair the day before St. James's day, viz. the 24th of July.

A'BDICATE (V.) to renounce, reſign, give over, withdraw from, or voluntarily forſake an office, thing or perſon, by expreſs words in writing, or by doing ſuch acts as are inconſiſtent with the holding or retaining the office or thing, &c.

ABDICA'TION (S.) the act whereby a magiſtrate renounces, or gives up his office, both for himſelf and his heirs; it is frequently confounded with reſignation; but ſtrictly ſpeaking, abdication is a pure and ſimple act of reſigning or laying down; whereas reſignation is done in favour of ſome other perſon; in a Law-Senſe, the wilful violation of the laws by a magiſtrate is called an abdication.

ABDO'MEN (S.) in Anatomy, is the lower belly, or that part which is between the navel and the privities, containing the liver, ſpleen, reins, ſtomach, inteſtines, bladder, &c. It is begirt with the peritonæum on the inſide; the foremoſt part is divided into the epigaſtrium, the right and left hypocondres, and the navel; the lower region or part is called the hypogaſtrium.

ABDUCTO'RES or ABDU'CENTS (S.) the common name of ſeveral muſcles, whoſe office is the withdrawing, opening, or pulling back the parts they are fixed to.

ABEA'RING (S.) a Law-Term, ſignifying carriage or behaviour.

ABECEDA'RIAN (S.) a teacher, or learner of the firſt rudiments of reading, commonly called the ABC, or alphabet; among the Antients, thoſe compoſitions were called abecedaries, where each ſtrophe, or verſe of three lines, and ſometimes each verſe began alphabetically; of this kind is the 118th Pſalm, and the Lamentations of Jeremiah the prophet; from whence it is probably conjectured the Jews invented this kind of poetry for the aſſiſtance of the memory.

A'BER (S.) an old Britiſh word, ſignifying the fall, or emptying of a leſſer water into a greater, as of a brook into a river, or a river into the ſea; alſo the mouth of a river; from whence ſeveral rivers are named, and ſeveral towns built at or near their mouth take their names, as Abertonway, Aberdeen, Abergavenny, &c.

ABERA'VON (S.) an ancient borough-town, governed by a port reeve, in Glamorganſhire, in South-Wales; 150 computed, and 193 meaſured miles from London.

ABERFO'RD or ABERFO'RTH (S.) a ſmall market-town in the Weſt-Riding of Yorkſhire, noted for pin-making; it is about one mile in length, ſituate upon a Roman way; it hath a market weekly on Wedneſday; and two annual fairs, the one on the 21ſt of April, the other the 19th of September; 139 computed, and 180 meaſured miles from London.

ABERGAVE'NNY (S.) a large well built and peopled town in Monmouthſhire in South-Wales, carrying on a conſiderable trade in flannels; its market day is weekly on Tueſday; diſtant from London 111 computed, and 142 meaſured miles.

ABERI'STWITH (S.) a market-town in Cardiganſhire, in South-Wales; built on the ſea-ſhore; has a great market weekly on Monday; distant from London 146 computed, and 229 measured miles.

ABERRA'TION (S.) a wandering or going out of the way.

ABE'T (V.) to support or maintain, to set on, aid, assist, advise, or encourage.

ABE'TMENT (S.) the encouragement of, or setting on a person to commit a crime, or do an act.

ABE'TTER or ABE'TTOR (S.) an adviser, assister, or egger on to any unlawful act, except treason, in which the law deems every person concerned a principal.

ABE'YANCE (S.) in the Law, is when lands, goods, tenements, &c. are in expectation, and not in possession.

ABHO'R (V.) to hate, detest, loath, abominate.

ABHO'RRENCE or ABHO'RRENCY (S.) an hating, loathing, detesting, or abominating.

A'BIB (S.) signifies green ears of corn, or fresh fruits; and was the first month of the Jews ecclesiastical year, answering to part of our March and April; in Judea, the corn used to be ripe in this month; it was sometimes called Nisan, which, before the Israelites going out of Egypt, was the seventh month of the year; but afterwards, by God's express command, it was reckoned for the first in the church account, Tizri being the first month of the civil year; it came in about autumn, and was the beginning not only of the year, but according to Scaliger and many others, of the world too, whose reasons for the affirmative are too weighty for their opponents. Upon the fourteenth day of this month Abib God commanded the passover to be killed.

ABI'DE (V.) to remain or stay in a place; also to suffer, endure, allow of.

A'BJECT (A.) mean, poor, low, base, vile, wretched, miserable.

A'BJECT (S.) a person of no reputation or esteem, a base, vile wretch.

ABJE'CT (V.) to put or cast away, to reject with disdain, scorn, or contempt.

ABJE'CTION or A'BJECTNESS (S.) poverty, meanness, vileness, miserableness.

ABIE'NA (S.) a goddess among the Romans, who was supposed to have the power of making their going out prosperous or unsuccessful.

ABI'LITY (S.) power, wealth, skill, capacity of doing a thing.

ABINTE'STATE (S.) the heir of a person who dies without making a will.

A'BJUGATE (V.) to unyoke, or uncouple, to set at liberty.

ABJU'RE (V.) to disown, or renounce solemnly by oath.

ABJURA'TION (S.) a solemn disowning, renouncing, or recanting of an opinion, doctrine, or person, by oath; in the Law, it particularly signifies solemnly promising never to yield, or give the obedience or assistance of a subject, to some other person or persons, who pretend to claim a right to the crown, in prejudice of the then reigning prince, as of the Pretender and his family. In our old Customs, it meant a voluntary banishment of a man's self from the kingdom for ever, which, in some cases, was admitted for criminals, instead of putting them to death, which the letter of the law required, provided they could shelter them in a church, or church-yard. So blind was the ill-directed zeal of this island, that from Edward the Confessor's time to the Reformation, which was about the space of five hundred years, whatever place or building was consecrated by the clergy, for any real or pretended religious use, screened offenders from the justice of the law, their crimes had rendered them liable to; instances of which are very frequent in the history of those times; nay, they stretched it so far, as to protect all manner of villany, even murder itself, as may be particularly seen in the history of Westminster: The person thus sheltering himself had nothing to do but to confess his crime to the justices or coroner, and abjuring the kingdom, he was at liberty; for after abjuration a cross was given him, which he was to carry in his hand thro' the highways, till he was got out of the king's dominions; which was the banner of the mother church. But this not being thought honour enough to the church's power, it was by degrees so increased, that the offender had nothing more to do than to abjure his free liberty of living in common with his fellow subjects, and confining himself to a perpetual habitation in the monastery, or other place he had made his sanctuary; from whence they frequently made sallys, to rob and plunder their neighbours, and carried their booty into their den with them.

ABLA'CTATE (V.) to leave a thing off by degrees, as to wean a child from his mother's breast.

ABLACTA'TION (S.) a doing things leisurely; in Gardening, it is a method of engrafting, commonly called inarching, and is practicable only, where the stock to be grafted on, and the tree from which the graft is to be taken stand so close, that the cyon or branch may be applied without cutting off from its own stock; for which reason it is mostly practised on plants, that grow in cases, as oranges, lemons, jessamins, &c. In England, April is the proper season for the operation, which is performed after this manner: The rind and wood of the branch intended for the graft, and also the stock upon which it is to be engrafted, is pared away about three or four inches, which two parts so pared are tied together, and covered with clay, or other gardening matter; when they have continued so long together, that they are well incorporated, the head of the ſtock is cut off about four inches above the binding; and the ſpring following they cut off the graft, leaving the ſtock to ſubſiſt by itſelf.

ABLAQUEA'TION (S.) that part of gardening that digs away the mould or earth from the roots of trees, that the ſun, air and rain may eaſily come at them, in order to recover loſt, or improve their preſent fertility.

ABLA'TION (S.) a taking away, diminution, or making leſs.

A'BLATIVE CASE (S.) according to the common method of Grammar, is the ſixth or laſt caſe; and in Latin, is ſometimes expreſſed by a prepoſition ſet before the word it is ſaid to govern, or cauſe to be put in this caſe, and ſometimes it is not expreſſed, but underſtood; but as this does not properly belong to the Engliſh language, I refer you to the Engliſh grammar prefixed to this Dictionary.

A'BLE (A.) ſufficient, or capable to do a particular act or thing.

A'BLEGATE (V.) to ſend a perſon abroad upon an embaſſy, or other employment; alſo to ſend a perſon out of the way, that is troubleſome to one.

ABLEGA'TION (S.) a ſending abroad, or out of the way.

A'BLENESS (S.) ſufficiency, power, or capacity to do a thing.

A'BLEPSY (S.) blindneſs of the eyes, or want of ſight; alſo inadvertence, unadviſedneſs, or rathneſs.

ABLIGA'BON S.) a flower, called by the botaniſts narciſſus, or the white daffodil.

By the paſſing of theſe points from one ſign to another, the aſtrologers pretend to determine or foretel the fate of ſtates kingdoms, and private perſons.

ABSO'LVE (V.) to forgive, pardon, or releaſe, to ſet at liberty, &c.

A'BSOLUTE (A.) whatever is independent of, or free from the power of any other being, perſon or authority: This word, as it is of vaſt extent, ſo it is applied to a great variety of ſubjects; in its full force and extent it is applicable to no being or power whatever, but God; but in a qualified and reſtrained ſenſe, it is uſed for an idea, in which relation is not conſidered; as, man is an abſolute term, creature or father are relative ones. In Government, that prince is called abſolute, where the laws are the reſult of his will, and whoſe power has no reſtraint by the conſtitution; in Religion, it is oppoſed to conditional by the Calviniſts, who ſay, that predeſtination and reprobation are the pure effects of God's power and will. By the church church of Rome, it is oppoſed to declarative, when ſhe affirms the power of forgiving ſins is abſolutely in the prieſt; to which the church of England anſwers, The prieſt has only a declarative, or miniſterial power; when it is oppoſed to cauſe, it ſignifies ſelf-exiſtence, and can then be applied to God only. In Mathematicks, an abſolute number is the known quantity, that after the proper operations have been made, poſſeſſes one ſide of an equation, being the rectangle or ſolid, whoſe root is to be found. In Aſtronomy, abſolute equation is the ſum of the optick and excentrick equations; in Grammar, ablative abſolute is that part of a ſentence or diſcourſe, that neither governs, or is governed of any other part, and without which the ſentence would be intelligible.

A'BSOLUTELY (Part.) poſitively, unalterably, without controul.

A'BSOLUTENESS (S.) freedom, arbitrarineſs, uncontroulableneſs.

ABSOLU'TION (S.) the act of forgiving, pardoning, or releaſing; it is commonly applied to the act of the prieſt in the Roman communion, who pretends to have the power of remiſſion, or abſolution of ſins.

ABSO'RB (S.) to ſuck or dry up, to conſume or waſte.

ABSO'RBENTS (S.) certain phyſical medicines, which by their ſoftneſs and porofity, ſheathe the aſperity of ſharp, pungent humours, by imbibing or drying away ſuperfluous morbifick moiſture; ſuch as the teſtaceous powders of hartſhorn, coral, crabs claws, &c. theſe medicines are ſometimes called ſweetners and dryers. This term is frequently confounded with bolus.

ABSTAI'N (V.) to forbear or leave off a thing, to moderate one's deſires.

ABSTE'MIOUS (A.) moderate or temperate, particularly in eating or drinking.

ABSTE'RGENT (S.) a cleanſer, wiper, cleaner; in Phyſick, thoſe medicines that cleanſe the parts, and carry off the morbid matter of wounds, ulcers, &c. are called abſtergents, abſterſives, or detergents.

A'BSTINENCE (S.) a faſting from, or forbearing any thing; particularly uſed in a religous ſenſe, as an act of humiliation in the times of common plagues, war, famine, &c. in Phyſick, it is a moderate and careful uſe of food, whether meats or drinks.

A'BSTRACT (S.) the compendium, epitome, or heads of any book, deed, or act of parliament, and is ſuppoſed to be ſomewhat leſs or ſhorter than an abridgment.

ABSTRA'CTED (A.) ſeparated, drawn away from. In Mathematicks, Arithmetick, Algebra, Geometry, &c. are called pure or abſtracted, becauſe in them the ſimple properties and relations of quantities only are conſidered; but in Accompts, Surveying, Navigation, Hydroſtaticks, &c. other conſiderations being taken in, they are called concrete or mixed mathematicks.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY (Part.) purely, ſimply, free from mixture.

ABSTRA'CTION (S.) is that operation of the mind, whereby we ſeparate the qualities or properties of things, and take them under a general conſideration, arguing upon them as if they had no relation to particular ſubjects.

ABSTRU'SE (A.) difficult, hard, obſcure, not eaſy to be underſtood.

ABSTRU'SENESS or ABSTRU'SITY (S.) difficulty, darkneſs, obſcurity, hard to be underſtood or comprehended.

ABSU'RD (A.) contrary to common ſenſe, directly oppoſite to the truth: This term is much uſed by mathematicians, and particularly by Euclid, moſt of whoſe demonſtrations cloſe with ſhewing the abſurdity of the contrary to the propoſition laid down, and from thence concluding the truth of what is advanced.

ABSU'RDNESS or ABSU'RDITY (S.) monſtrouſneſs, falſity, evidently contrary to truth.

ABU'NDANCE (S.) plenty, more than enough, ſuperfluity.

ABU'NDANT (A.) overflowing with plenty; in Arithmetick, abundant numbers are thoſe, the total of whoſe even or aliquot parts exceed themſelves; as 18, the aliquot parts of which are 9, 6, 3, 2, 1, the ſum or total of which is 21, &c.

ABU'SE (V.) to affront, miſuſe, to pervert any perſon or thing; alſo to impoſe upon or cheat the ignorant, by pretending the matter or thing is different from, or much better than it really is.

ABU'SE (S.) the perverting of a thing from the intended or true purpoſe.

ABU'SIVE (A.) affrontive, injurious, rude.

ABU'T (V.) to terminate, bound, or border upon another place or thing.

ABY'SS (S.) a great unfathomable depth, the unmeaſurable waters of the great deep; in Scripture, hell is called by this name, as are likewiſe the deepeſt parts of the ſea, and the chaos, which in the beginning of the world was covered with darkneſs, and upon which the ſpirit of God moved. The ancient Hebrews, as well as the generality of the eaſtern people at this day, were of opinion that the abyſs, or the ſea and waters encompaſſed the whole earth, which was immerſed in, and floating upon the abyſs, like a water melon, upon, and in the water, which covers part of it; farther, they believed, that the earth was founded upon the waters, or at leaſt upon the abyſs: Under theſe waters, and at the bottom of this abyſs, the ſcripture repreſents the giants to be groaning, and ſuffering the puniſhment of their ſin; there the Rephaims are confined, those old giants, who when they were living, made the people round about them tremble; in these dungeons also, the prophet describes the kings of Tyre, Babylon, and Egypt, to be lying down and buried, yet alive, and expiating the guilt of their pride and cruelty. St. John describes these depths, as the abodes of devils and wicked men, Rev. ix. 1, 2, 11. where he says, I saw a star fall from heaven, and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of it, as the smoke of a great furnace, which obscured the sun and air; and there came out of the smoak locusts, which scattered themselves over the whole earth: And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name is the destroyer; likewise, Rev. ix. 7.

Fountains and rivers, in the opinion of the Hebrews, are derived from the abyss or sea, which they suppose issue from thence by invisible channels, and returned thither through others of their own forming upon the earth. At the deluge the depths below, or the waters of the sea broke down their banks, the fountains forced their springs, and spread over the earth, while at the same time the cataracts of heaven were opened, and overflowed the whole world.

The abyss which covered the earth in the beginning of the world, was put in agitation by the spirit of God, or by an impetuous wind; this abyss was so called by way of anticipation, because it afterwards composed the sea, and the waters of the abyss issued from it, and were formed by the flowing of it; or if you please, the earth sprung out of the midst of this abyss, like an island rising out of the sea, and appeared suddenly to our eyes, after having been for a long time concealed under water.—Calmet.

AC, AK or AKE, in the old Saxon language signifies oak, and when put in the beginning of the name of a town, imports that place took its name either from some remarkable oak, or a wood of that timber; so Acton is the town of oaks, &c.

ACADE'MICKS (S.) among the ancients were the followers of the doctrine of Plato, and now it is used for, and applied to, the members of the publick societies erected either in England, or in any foreign country, for the improvement of arts and sciences of all kinds.

ACA'DEMY (S.) the place where learned men meet, to confer upon the discoveries already made in the sciences, or to try experiments for their further improvement; it is sometimes used for a college or university; it is likewise applied to any school where arts and sciences are taught, and particularly to those schools or colleges, where young men are qualified for the ministry, in the dissenting way.

ACANA'CEOUS (A.) prickly, any plant of the thistle kind.

ACCELERA'TION (S.) a continual growing quicker or faster.

ACCE'NSION (S.) the enkindling, or setting any natural body on fire, such as wood, coals, &c.

A'CCENT (S.) the tone or manner of speaking, or reading, used by any particular nation, country or province. With the Rhetoricians, it signifies a peculiar manner of expressing certain sentences, by which a quite different idea is intended to be expressed, from what the plain, true, literal, and grammatical meaning of the words are. Among the Grammarians, there are variety of marks called accents, which, as they may be useful, take as follows. The grave accent is marked thus (`) over a vowel, and shews that the voice is to be lower'd. The acute thus (´) signifying that the voice is to be raised. The circumflex accent thus (^) intimates a sort of waving, or quavering of the voice; from whence in musick, that trill, or warbling of the voice commonly called shaking, which renders vocal musick so agreeable, is called the accent. The long accent is marked thus (¯) importing that the vowel over which it is placed is to be held long, but in the English language instead of this mark we commonly double the vowel as succeed instead of succed. The short accent is marked thus (˘) signifying that the vowel over which 'tis placed must be pronounced very quick.

ACCE'NT (V.) to tone or modulate the voice, according to the custom or usage of some particular nation or province.

A'CCENTING (S.) the proper toning or pronouncing of a word by the voice, or duly marking in writing the vowel or syllable upon which the stress lies.

ACCE'PTANCE or ACCEPTA'TION (S.) the true meaning of a word, according to the general received sense and use of it; also the approving of, and receiving a person or thing favourably or kindly; in Law, it is the tacit confirming an act formerly done by another which which might have been undone or avoided, if ſuch acceptance had not been.

ACCE'SS (S.) leave or permiſſion to go, approach, or come near to any perſon, place, or thing.

ACCE'SSIBLE (A.) whatever may be come at, or approached to.

ACCE'SSION (S.) increaſing or adding to any thing. This word is now generally underſtood of a king or queen's coming to the throne, by the death of the precedent king or queen; as the 2nd of June is the acceſſion of his preſent majeſty king George the ſecond, to the throne of Great Britain. With Phyſicians, it is the fit, or time of being at the worſt in any intermittent diſtemper, called alſo the paroxiſm.

ACCE'SSARY or ACCE'SSORY (S.) an helper, aider, aſſiſter, adviſer, encourager, or concealer; and by ſtatute, particularly applied to thoſe concerned with felons, either of adviſing them to commit the fact, or concealing them, or furthering their eſcape from juſtice after the fact, for which they are deemed felons alſo, though not principally. In the Civil Law, it means any thing that of right belongs to, or depends on another, altho' it be ſeparated from it; as if the floors of an houſe are taken up to be new laid or mended, they are an acceſſary, ſuppoſing the houſe was to be ſold, unleſs in the ſale particular mention was made of the defect.

A'CCIDENCE (S.) a ſmall book, which children in England commonly learn at their entrance upon the Latin tongue, containing the firſt principles of that language.

A'CCIDENT (S.) an unforeſeen or undeſigned effect, following by caſualty or chance, from ſome act, without the foreknowledge or deſign either of the agent or patient, or at leaſt, one of them. As for inſtance, if the wind blows a tile from off the houſe, which falls upon a paſſenger, and wounds or kills him; this is purely an accident. But if a bricklayer, who may be tiling a houſe, intendedly throws a tile at a paſſenger, and wounds or kills him, it is murder or maiming in the thrower, and an accident to the perſon killed or injured. Among the Logicians, whatever does not belong to the being or eſſence of a thing, as a man's cloaths, money, &c. are called accidents; alſo ſuch qualities as are changeable are ſo called, as in red cloth, becauſe that, purely as cloth, it might have been and may ſtill be, brown, black, &c. In Heraldry, accidents are the principal points in the eſcutcheon; and with the Aſtrologers, the moſt extraordinary circumſtances that have occurred in the courſe of a perſon's life, are called accidents.

ACCIDEN'TAL (A.) whatever happens by chance, unforeſeenly or undeſignedly. In Perſpective, any points in the horizontal line, where oblique parallels concur, are called accidental points.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS (S.) the happening caſually, or by chance, without the foreknowledge, contrivance, or conſent of the perſon, to whom the thing ſo happens.

ACCLAMA'TION (S.) the joyful ſhouting of the people upon any publick occaſion, by which kind of interjection they deſign to expreſs the eſteem for, or approbation of, the perſon, matter or thing, to which they apply it.

ACCLI'VITY (S.) the ſteepneſs or ſloping of a hill, when conſidered as aſcending or going upwards.

ACCO'MPT (V.) to reckon or caſt up, and is particularly applied to the method merchants keep their books in, by way of debtor and creditor, or double entry.

ACCO'MPT (S.) a mercantile term for a collection of ſeveral particular ſums ready caſt up, whereby the profit or loſs upon any particular commodity, or the balance due from a perſon, may be plainly and truly known; and of theſe there are various ſorts, ſuch as the Accompt of Sales, which is when a perſon abroad ſends me goods to ſell for him here in England, which, after I have done, I adviſe him thereof, with the parcels, and perſons to whom, and the price or prices for which they were ſold, together with the conditions, whether for ready money or time, which is entered upon the right-hand or creditor-ſide of the accompt; and all the charges, and my commiſſion, premium, proviſion, or allowance for the ſale, on the left-hand ſide; and if the money be received for the ſaid goods, the difference between the debter or creditor-ſide, which is called the balance is carried to my employer's accompt current, which is the clear, nett, running accompt of bills drawn, or caſh remitted between him and me, excluſive of any charges or deductions whatever. Some merchants, who deal much by commiſſion, or are factors to other merchants, keep an accompt of time and ready money. An accompt of time, is when I lay out conſiderable ſums of money for freight, cuſtoms, &c. for my employer, or accept or pay bills drawn by him upon me, before I have ſold his goods, or receive the money for them, in which caſe I charge him common intereſt for ſuch ſums, and for ſuch times, as I am in advance for him, and no longer; and this accompt may be credited by his accompt of ready money, as I receive it; all which charges, as well for intereſt as merchandize, muſt be deducted before the proceed is carried to his accompt current.

ACCO'MPTANT (S.) one who exerciſes, or is ſkilled in the proper method of accompts, or book-keeping, which, among merchants, and in publick offices, is by double entry, commonly called the Italian method.

ACCO'RD (S.) conſent, agreement, union.

ACCO'RD (V.) to agree, to conſent, to yield to, be of the ſame judgment or opinion with another.

A'CCURACY or A'CCURATENESS (S.) exactneſs, juſtneſs, delicacy, nicety, curiouſneſs.

A'CCURATE (A.) exact, curious, delicate, fine; any thing done very exactly, carefully, juſtly, or curiouſly.

ACCU'RSED (A.) one that lies under excommunication, or any other judicial curſe; alſo deteſtable, or whatever is abominable, hateful, or that ought to be avoided, ſhunned, or left undone.

ACCUSA'TION (S.) the charging with ſome crime or miſdemeanor, an impeachment or indictment.

ACCU'SATIVE CASE (S.) in Grammar, is the fourth caſe or mode of changing the ending of nouns in the Latin tongue, and is always governed of a verb active expreſſed or underſtood, which paſſes its action upon the ſubject ſignified by the word put in this caſe, as John loves Mary.

ACCU'SE (V.) to indict, impeach, or charge with a fault.

ACCU'SER (S.) any one that indicts, impeaches, or charges with a crime, whether true or falſe; but by the occult writers, ſuch as Agrippa, accuſers are the eighth order of devils, whoſe chief is called Aſteroth, or a ſpy, and who, in the Revelation of St. John, is by way of eminence called the accuſer of the brethren, &c.

ACCU'STOM (V.) to uſe or habituate one's ſelf to do a thing often.

ACCU'STOMABLY (Part.) uſually, commonly, frequently, ordinarily.

ACE (S.) one; ſo among Cards, that which hath but one ſpot is called an ace; and on dice, that ſide that has but one ſpot is called the ace; in a metaphorical Senſe, it ſignifies almoſt, or nigh to; as, He was within an ace of the matter.

ACE'LDAMA (S.) or rather Chakeldam, the inheritance or portion of blood; the field which the Jewiſh prieſts bought with the thirty pieces of ſilver that had been given to Judas Iſcariot, for betraying Jeſus Chriſt, was called by this name; for upon reflecting with himſelf, what he had done, he came and threw down the money, which he had received, and went and hanged himſelf: The prieſts not thinking it lawful to put it into the treaſury of the temple, becauſe it was the price of blood, bought a field, called the potters, with it, to bury ſtrangers in; this field is ſtill ſhewn to travellers, being ſmall, and covered with an arched arched roof, under which the bodies that are there depoſited, are reported to be conſumed in three or four days time.

ACE'RBITY (S.) ſourneſs, harſhneſs of taſte, bitterneſs, &c.

A'CHERON (S.) a river of Epirus, riſing out of the lake Acheruſia, and ſwelled with ſeveral other rivers, empties itſelf into the bay of Ambracia. The poets feigned it to be the ſon of Ceres, whom ſhe hid in hell for fear of the Titans, that threatned the deſtruction of her family, and turned into a river over which departed ſouls were ferried. It is ſometimes put for hell or the grave, becauſe that Epirus being fertile in mines, the labourers croſſed this river to go to their work, from whence but few returned. The water being impregnated with vitriol, &c. appears bluiſh, and emits unwholeſome fumes.

A'CHOR (S.) a ſourneſs at the ſtomach, proceeding from indigeſtion, which occaſions flatulencies, and diſagreeable belchings; alſo a ſort or degree of the herpes, or ſcald affecting the head, by a ſpreading inflammation that eats off the hair, and grows into a cruſt or ſcab, &c.

ACRO'STICK (S.) a term in Poetry, for thoſe particular ſort of verſes, each line of which begins with a letter of a perſon's name, title, or matter: There have been many particular whimſies in this kind; but the above method is what is generally uſed.

ACROTE'RIA or ACRO'TERS (S.) thoſe pedeſtals, in Architecture, upon which vaſes, globes, or ſtatues ſtand, at the ends and middle of pediments or frontiſpieces; ſometimes they are applied to the ornamental figures themſelves, which are placed as crownings on the tops of temples or other buildings; and ſometimes they ſignify thoſe ſharp pinnacles, or ſpiry battlements, which ſtand in ranges about flat buildings, and rails and balluſters.

ACT (S.) in Philoſophy, is the effective uſe or application of ſome power or faculty, whereby ſomething is done. The publick deliberations and reſolutions of an aſſembly, ſenate, council or convocation, are called acts. In the Univerſities, the theſis or argument maintained publickly by a candidate for a degree, or to ſhew the capacity or proficiency of a ſtudent, is called an act. In Poetry, acts are the diviſions or principal parts of a drama, contrived to give reſpite to the performers and ſpectators: During the interval, our theatres commonly divert the audience, either with a concert of muſick, dance, or ſong, and in the mean while the actors prepare themſelves to go on with the remaining part of the play, either by changing their habits to introduce other characters, or whatever may render the entertainment moſt agreeable; the number of acts in a well conducted play is uſually five. In the church of Rome, the act of faith is a pompous ſort of puniſhment, being the laſt part of the proceſs of the the inquiſition; it was formerly called a general ſermon or diſcourſe upon faith, where a great many perſons charged with miſperſuaſions in religion, ſometimes to the number of two hundred, are forced to appear in a ſort of publick proceſſion, habited in a frightful manner, and condemned to ſeveral penances, and ſometimes to capital puniſhments. Now to make this act of faith more ſolemn and frequented, the inquiſitor pitches upon a Sunday, or ſome other feſtival, and the day being given out by the biſhop's or inquiſitor's order, all the pariſh prieſts of the city or place where the ſolemnity is kept, take occaſion after ſermon to tell the people, that in ſuch a church the inquiſitor will make a general diſcourſe upon the ſubject of faith; that all people who go thither, will have the benefit of the uſual indulgence of forty-days, and that there will be no preaching in any other church in the city upon that day. The ſame notice is given to the religious houſes, where they commonly have ſermons, acquainting the ſuperiors they muſt omit preaching in their reſpective monaſteries that day, and ſend two or four friars to be preſent at the inquiſitor's ſermon, and at the giving of ſentence. Now, if any obſtinate or relapſed heretick is to be delivered over to the civil magiſtrate, the biſhop and inquiſitor ſend word to the ſheriff, or other officer of the place, to be ready with his poſſe, againſt ſuch a day and hour, at ſuch a place, to receive a certain heretick from the inquiſition court, and that upon the ſame day, or the morning before, he ſhould take care to notify the execution all the town over, by the publick crier. In moſt of the inquiſition courts, eſpecially in Spain, they have a cuſtom to bring faggots of brambles to the ſtake the day before the act of faith; the ſame day likewiſe the priſoners have their heads and beards ſhaven, and upon the morning of this religious aſſize all the malefactors are dreſſed in the habit of their profeſſion: They have all a black veſt, with breeches down to their heels, and without any thing either on their head or feet, excepting that ſome notorious raſcals had a ſcandalous ſort of mitre on, as a puniſhment for being guilty of falſe witneſs in ſome horrid manner. Thoſe who are convicted of hereſy, and penitent for it, or ſtrongly ſuſpected of hereſy, have a monkiſh ſort of frock, commonly called a ſambenito, of a ſaffron or flame colour, and with a red St. Andrew's croſs before and behind; the reſt, whoſe faults are leſſer, are only in black. Each of them have a ſmothered torch put into their hands, and a rope about their necks; but thoſe who are condemned to the ſtake, have a ſamar on; the priſoners are permitted to ſit on the ground and wait their doom; thoſe who are to be burnt, are ordered into a neighbouring apartment, where confeſſors are ſent to them to convert them, and prepare them for death. About four in the morning the ſervants of the inquiſition give bread and figs to the priſoners; and about ſun-riſing, at the toll of the cathedral great bell, all thoſe who undertake to ſee the priſoners forth-coming, at the end of the proceſſion meet in the inquiſition hall, where the inquiſitor ſeats himſelf near the gate of the inquiſition, and the regiſter of the office reads over the names of the malefactors, beginning with thoſe whoſe crimes are ſmalleſt, and ending with thoſe who are charged deepeſt; and here the priſoners go all out one by one, each of them having an undertaker, who is their ſecurity, that they ſhall not ſlip off in the proceſſion; in which the Dominicans go firſt, becauſe the head of their order was the contriver of the inquiſition; the colours of the inquiſition are likewiſe flying; after theſe friars follow the priſoners with their bail. The leſſer criminals have a crucifix brought after them, and when they have gone to the end of their walk, thoſe condemned to the fire are brought out. Thoſe who eſcape the execution of the ſtake, are abſolved with certain ceremonies, and reconciled to the church, having firſt been beaten with rods. The execution at the ſtake being over, thoſe who are penitent and reconciled, are carried back to priſon, and the next day being brought into the inquiſitor's conſiſtory, they are admoniſhed to go carefully through the penance enjoined them, and ſo are all ſent off to the place of their reſpective ſentences. Thoſe who are condemned to the gallies, are carried off to the civil magiſtrate's goal; ſome of them are whipped through the high ſtreets of the town; ſome are ordered to wear a ſambenito, either every day or elſe upon Sundays or holidays. At Goa theſe unhappy perſons, before they are releaſed, are inſtructed in the doctrine and ceremonies of the church of Rome; after which, they have a ſchedule or paper of the particulars of their penance given to them; and here they are all ſworn to ſilence, never to diſcover any thing which they have ſaid, ſeen, or heard at table, or any other place in the inquiſition.

ACT (V.) to do ſomething.

A'CTING (S.) the doing or performing ſomething.

A'CTION (S.) ſomething done or performed; among the Orators, it is the peculiar manner of geſture made uſe of by the ſpeaker to gain upon his audience; in Law, it is when one perſon brings a writ againſt another for the recovery of a debt, breach of promiſe, &c. Alſo a ſhare or part of a company's ſtock; this term is principally uſed by foreigners; as, an action in the Miſſiſippi ſtock anſwers to a part of our South-Sea ſtock, &c. In Law, it is the proceſs or form of a ſuit granted to the plaintiff for the recovery of his his right, &c. of which there are many ſorts according to the occaſion. In Painting, Carving, &c. it is the poſture the figure or figures are put in, by which the beholder judges of the deſign.

A'DAMITES (S.) a ſect of hereticks that pretended to imitate Adam's nakedneſs before the fall, believing themſelves as innocent, ſince their redemption by the death of Chriſt, and therefore met together naked upon all occaſions, aſſerting, that if Adam had not ſinned, there would have been no marriages. They ſprung from the Carpocratians and Gnoſticks, and followed the errors of an infamous villain called Prodicus: They deified the four elements, rejected prayer, and ſaid it was not neceſſary to confeſs Chriſt. This ſect with an addition of many blaſphemies, was renewed at Antwerp in the 13th century, by one Tandeme, who being followed by 3000 ſoldiers, raviſhed women and maids, calling their villanies by ſpiritual names. One Pikard, a Flandrian, renewed it alſo in Bohemia in the 15th century, whence they ſpread into Poland. They were ſaid to meet in the night, and uſe theſe words, Swear, forſwear, and diſcover not the ſecret. See Bayle's Hiſtorical Dictionary.

A'DMIRALTY COURT (S.) the court where cauſes relating to maritime affairs are tried; there are ſeveral of them, but the chief is in London. All proceſſes and proceedings in this court run in the name of the lord admiral, and not in the king's: In this court he has a deputy or lieutenant, called judge of the admiralty, who is commonly an eminent doctor of the civil law. Proceedings in this court, in matters relating to property, are governed by the civil law, the ſea being without the verge or limits of the common law: They proceed to the action by way of libel, the plaintiff giving ſecurity to proſecute the ſuit, and to pay whatever ſhall be awarded againſt him, if he fails; on the contrary, the defendant, at the diſcretion of the judge, ſecures the plaintiff, that he will make his appearance, ſtand to every thing his proctor ſhall do in his name, and ſatisfy any judgment that ſhall be given againſt him. In this court the laws of Rhodes and Oleron are likewiſe made uſe of: The former decrees and cuſtoms of the Engliſh court of admiralty have the force of precedents for deciding controverſies. Under this court there is alſo a court of equity, for determining differences among merchants. In criminal matters, which is commonly about piracy, the proceedings were formerly by accuſation and information; but this being found inconvenient, it was enacted by two ſtatutes, made in the reign of Henry VIII. that criminal cauſes ſhould be tried by witneſſes and a jury, authorized by ſpecial commiſſion of the king to the lord admiral, in which ſome of the judges in Weſtminſter-hall are always commiſſioners. The common law of England and the admiralty have diſtinct boundaries and precincts of power; for in the ſea, as far as low water mark reaches, the place is reckoned in the neighbouring county, and cauſes thence ariſing are determinable by the common law; however, when the ſea is full, the admiral has juriſdiction there alſo (as long as the tide holds) over matters done between the low water mark and the land.

ADU'LTERESS or ADUL'TRESS (S.) a married woman who hath criminal converſation with one that is not her huſband.

ADU'LTERATE or ADULTERATED (A.) ſpoiled, mixed with a baſer ſort, corrupted, counterfeited.

ADU'LTERATE (V.) to counterfeit, ſpoil, corrupt or mix with ſomething worſe.

ADULTERA'TION (S.) the counterfeiting, ſpoiling, or corrupting things pure, by mixture or imitation, whereby the effect is hindered from being produced, either wholly or in part.

ADU'LTEROUS (A.) an unlawful and criminal converſation of married perſons; alſo any counterfeit or pretended wares that are made or ſold inſtead of real ones.

ADU'LTERY (S.) is generally underſtood of the act of whoredom or incontinency in married perſons; but if one be married, and the other ſingle, it is called adultery in the married perſon, and fornication in the unmarried; in the old Law Books, 'tis called advowtry, was puniſh'd by the law of Moſes with the death of both the man and the woman, who were guilty of the crime, Leviticus xx. 10. When any man, prompted by the ſpirit of jealouſy, ſuſpected his wife to have committed adultery, he brought her (ſay the Rabbins) firſt before the judges, and ſet forth to them, that having often admoniſhed his wife not to be converſant in private with a certain perſon, ſhe regarded not his admonition; but as ſhe aſſerted her innocency, and would not acknowledge her fault, he required that ſhe ſhould be ſentenced to drink the waters of bitterneſs, that God by this means might diſcover what ſhe was willing to conceal. The man produced his witneſſes, and had them heard; after which both the man and the woman were carried to Jeruſalem, and brought before the Sanhedrim, which was the ſole judge of ſuch cauſes. The judges of the Sanhedrim at firſt endeavoured with their threatnings to confound the woman, and oblige her to confeſs her crime; if ſhe perſiſted in denying it, they had her well tired with walking, to ſee if any thing could be got out of her by this means; and if ſhe ſtill denied the fact, ſhe was led to the eaſtern gate of the court of Iſrael, and when ſhe was ſtript of the cloaths ſhe wore, and was dreſſed in black before a multitude of her own ſex, the prieſt then told her, that if ſhe knew herſelf to be innocent of that which ſhe was accuſed of, ſhe had nothing to apprehend; but that if ſhe was guilty, ſhe might expect to ſuffer all that the law threatned her with; to which ſhe anſwered, Amen, Amen. The prieſt wrote the terms of the law upon a piece of vellum, with ink made particularly for this uſe, without vitriol, that it might more eaſily be blotted out: The words were, If a ſtrange man has not come near you, and you are not polluted by forſaking the bed of your huſband, theſe bitter waters which I have curſed will not hurt you; but if you are gone aſtray from your huſband, and have polluted yourſelf by coming near to another man, may you be accurſed of the Lord, and become an example for all his people; may your thighs rot, and your belly ſwell till it burſt; may theſe curſed waters enter into your belly, and being ſwelled therewith, may your thighs putrefy. After this, the prieſt took a pitcher made of new earth, filled it with water out of a brazen baſon, which was near the altar of burnt offerings, caſt ſome duſt into it, taken from the pavement of the temple, mingled ſomething bitter with it, and having read the curſes abovementioned to the woman, and received her anſwer of Amen, he ſcraped wormwood, or some other bitter drug into the pitcher of water. During all this time, another priest was tearing her cloaths as low as her bosom, made her head bare, untied the tresses of her hair, fastened her cloaths together, which were torn after this manner, with a girdle bound under her breasts, and presented her with the tenth part of an epha, or about three pints of barley-meal, which was in a frying pan, without oil or incense. The other priest, who had prepared the waters of jealousy or bitterness, gave them to the accused person to drink; which being done, he put the pan with the meal in it into her hand; this was stirred before the Lord, and part of it thrown into the fire of the altar. If the woman was innocent, she returned with her husband, and the waters, instead of incommoding her, increased her health, and made her more fruitful than ever; if on the contrary, she was guilty, she grew pale immediately, and her eyes started out of her head, and, lest the temple should be polluted by her death, she was carried out with all speed and died instantly, with all the ignominious circumstances related in the curses, which, as they say, had the same effect also upon him with whom the woman was faulty, tho' he were absent, and at a distance. If the husband had also been guilty of the same crime, the bitter waters had no effect upon the woman tho' she was guilty. Since the return of the Jews from the captivity, the Rabbins say, that the trial of women, suspected of adultery has been suppressed for these two reasons, viz. first, the crime was become common; and secondly, because God's name should not be liable to be too often erazed by the waters of bitterness. So that when any husband had conceived just suspicions against his wife's fidelity, and had witnesses to depose, that they had seen her privately with the suspected persons, contrary to the direction of her husband, she was immediately divorced, and deprived of her dowry. And Leo of Modena assures us, that in this case the husband is obliged to dismiss his wife, whether he will or no, and to separate from her for ever; after which the woman is at liberty to marry again, having first stayed four months to see whether she is with child by her former husband, before she takes another. Calmet. The ancient Romans had no formal law against adultery; the emperor Augustus was the first who introduced a law to punish it, and had the misfortune to see it executed in the persons of his own children. In most European countries at this day, it is deemed a private matter, and none but the husband allowed to prosecute the offender; and tho' the husband be guilty as well as the wife, the wife cannot sue the husband for his fault. Socrates relates, that under the emperor Theodosius, women convicted of adultery were punished by a public constupration. Lycurgus punished the adulterer as a parricide; and the Locrians tore out his eyes; and in most parts of the east he was severely punish'd. The Saxons formerly burnt the adulteress, and erected a gibbet over her ashes, whereon they hang'd the adulterer. In England, king Edmond punished adultery as homicide; but Canutus ordained the man to be banished, and the woman to have her nose and ears cut off. In Spain, they punished this crime by cutting off the offending part. In Poland, before Christianity was established, they punished the man by nailing him by the testicles in the publick market-place, laying a razor within his reach necessitating him either to do justice upon himself, or perish in that condition. At present, the laws are more favourable. To divorce, and strip the adulteress of her dower, is all her punishment among us: In the Romish countries they shut them up in the nunneries.

A'DVOCATE (S.) one who pleads the cause of another.

A'DVOCATESHIP (S.) the office or business of an advocate.

ADVOWEE' or AVOWEE' (S.) a patron, or one who has a right of presentation to a church, benefice or parsonage.

ADVOW'SON (S.) the right of presentation of a clergyman to a living or benefice; and, when this right belongs to, or depends upon a manor as an apurtenance thereto, it is called advowson appendant; and when the right of presentation is absolute in some body or society of men, or some single person, without belonging to a manor, it is called an advowson in gross.

ADU'ST (A.) scorched, burnt, or parched up; so when the blood thro' excess of heat, having its thinner parts exhaled by steams or vapours, and the thicker parts which remain become black and foul, it is then by physicians said to be adust.

ADU'STIBLE (A.) that may be scorched, parched, or burnt.

ADU'STION (S.) scorching, parching, drying up with heat.

A'DYTUM (S.) a sanctuary; also a secret or retired place in the Pagan temples, where oracles were given, and into which none but the priests were admitted.

ADZE (S.) a sort of hatchet or chopping knife used by coopers, shipwrights, &c. some with long handles and short blades, others with short handles and long blades, but both bent like a bow when strung.

AE'RIAL (A.) of, or belonging to the air.

AFA'R (Part.) at a great distance.

A'FFABLE (A.) courteous, pleasant, easy to be spoken to, kind, good-natured.

AFFABI'LITY or AFFABLENESS (S.) kindness, courteousness, good-humouredness, condescensiveness, easiness of address.

AFFAI'R (S.) any business, concern, or matter to be done.

AFFE'CT (V.) to set one's mind upon a thing, to deſire or incline to, to love or reſpect; alſo to influence or move the paſſions of another perſon.

AFFECTA'TION (S.) ſelf-conceitedneſs, a particular ſtiff way of behaving.

AFFE'CTED (A.) inclined, diſpoſed, ſtiff, formal; in Phyſick, any tumour, or other diſorder in the body.

AFFE'CTION (S.) love, kindneſs, tenderneſs, or inclination for a perſon or thing; in Philoſophy, ſome property or quality of a body.

AFFE'CTIONATE (A.) very loving, kind or tender.

AFFE'CTIONS (S.) love, friendſhip, tenderneſs for, deſire, inclination, paſſion; in Philoſophy, the properties or qualities of any thing; alſo the paſſions or inclinations of the mind, ſuch as love, deſire, &c.

AFFE'TTO or AFFETTUO'SO (A.) a Muſical Term, ſignifying that ſuch a ſtrain or air ſhould be played or ſung in the tendereſt and moſt moving manner.

AFFI'ANCE (S.) hope, truſt, or confidence; in Law, it is the plighting of troth between a man and a woman upon an agreement of marriage.

AFFIDA'VIT (S.) a judicial ſwearing or giving witneſs, or bearing teſtimony upon oath to any matter or thing before a magiſtrate.

AFFI'NITY (S.) reſemblance, or relation of one thing to another; alſo kindred by marriage, ſeveral degrees of which prohibit marriage, as may be ſeen, Leviticus xviii.

AFFI'RM (V.) to ſwear, to proteſt, aſſure, avouch or maintain the truth of a thing; and in Law, it is the confirming a ſentence or determination formerly paſſed or agreed to.

AFFIRMA'TION (S.) the poſitive aſſerting a thing; and now by a peculiar application, it means the ſolemn oath or declaration of the people called Quakers, in a judicial way, which by act of parliament is indulged them inſtead of taking an oath as other people do, which in all matters of right is obligatory, but has no force in cauſes criminal.

AFFI'RMATIVE (A.) pertaining to affirmation, poſitive, peremptory; in which ſenſe it is oppoſed to negative.

AFFI'X (V.) to faſten to, to ſet or poſt up a bill to give publick notice.

AFFLA'TION (S.) a breathing or blowing upon; alſo inſpiration.

AFFLI'CT (V.) to vex, grieve, torment, to trouble, caſt down, oppreſs or diſquiet.

AFFLI'CTION (S.) trouble, ſorrow, grief, calamity, &c.

AFFLI'CTIVE (A.) that brings or cauſes grief, vexation, &c.

A'FFLUENCE, A'FFLUENCY or A'FFLUENTNESS (S.) plenty, riches, abundance.

A'FFLUENT (A.) abounding, increaſing, plenteous, more than ſufficient.

A'FFLUX (S.) a gathering together, a flowing or coming to.

AFFO'RD (V.) to give, to yield, to make allowance.

AFFRA'Y (S.) a diſturbance, noiſe, fight, or quarrel between two or more perſons.

AFFRE'SH (Part.) to do a thing anew, or over again.

A'FFRICANS (S.) with the Gardeners, a particular ſort of fine large headed marigolds.

AFFRI'GHT (V.) to ſurprize, terrify or ſcare, to put in fear.

AFFRO'NT (V.) to abuſe by ſaying or doing ſomething prejudicial to a perſon's character, &c. on purpoſe to raiſe a perſon's anger or reſentment.

AFFRO'NT (S.) an injury or abuſe, either by word or action.

AFFRO'NTIVE (A.) abuſive, injurious, rude, diſorderly.

AFFU'SION (S.) a pouring over or upon.

AFO'RE or AFO'REHAND (Part.) a perſon or thing that is got or done before another.

AFORESAI'D (Part.) ſomething ſpoken of before and is now again repeated.

AFT (Part.) that part of a ſhip towards the ſtern; the ſame with abaft.

A'FTER (Part.) later, behind, or beyond, in time or order.

A'FTER-BIRTH (S.) in Midwifry, the ſecundine or coats that contain the child in the womb, which comes away ſome ſmall time after the child is born, and which is very hazardous, if not taken due care of to bring away whole and intire.

A'FTER-MATH (S.) in Huſbandry, the latter crop of graſs that grows after a field has been mowed.

AFTERNOO'N (S.) is properly that part of that day that is between the middle of the day or twelve of the clock, and ſix, when the evening begins.

A'FTER-PAINS (S.) thoſe uneaſineſſes and pains that women feel in their groin, loins, &c. for ſome days after child-birth.

A'FTERWARD (Part.) ſomething done after, or when another is done.

A'GA (S.) is the title given by the Turks to the governor or colonel of the janizaries, and to the deputy-governors of towns; it ſignifies maſter or lord.

AGA'IN (Part.) the repetition of a thing once more.

AGAI'NST (Part.) contrary, or oppoſite to ſome other thing or perſon.

AGAPE' (S.) this is a Greek word, and ſignifies properly friendſhip. The feaſts of charity, which were in uſe among the Chriſtians of the primitive church were called by this name: They were celebrated in memory of the laſt ſupper which Jeſus Chriſt made with his apoſtles, when he inſtituted the holy euchariſt. Theſe feſtivals were kept in the church, towards the evening, after the common prayers were over, and the word of ſalvation had been heard: When this was done, the faithful eat together, with great

ſimplicity

ſimplicity and union, what every one had brought with them; ſo that the rich and poor were no way diſtinguiſhed. After a frugal and modeſt ſupper, they partook of the euchariſt, and gave each other the kiſs of peace: This cuſtom, good and laudable as it was in its original, ſoon degenerated, and was abuſed. St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 21. complains, that the rich deſpiſed the poor in their aſſemblies, and would not condeſcend to eat with them. The Jews had certain devotional entertainments, which had ſome relation to the agape we are ſpeaking of. Upon their great feſtival days they made feaſts for their family, their friends and relations; to theſe they invited the prieſts, the poor and orphans, and ſent them portions of their ſacrifices. Theſe repaſts were made in the temple, and before the Lord; and there were certain ſacrifices and firſt fruits appointed by the law, which were to be ſet apart for this purpoſe.—Calmet.

AGA'ST (A.) much frighted, ſurprized, or diſmayed with fear.

A'GATE (S.) a lower kind of precious ſtones, of which knife-handles and other toys are often made: There are many ſorts of them, as the agate ſardonyx, or ſardonyx, the agate onyx, or onyx, the agate calcedony, or calcedony only; alſo the Roman agate and German agate; it is ſometimes called achates, gagates, or ſhebo: It is ſaid to take its name from a river in Sicily, where it is found.

AGE (S.) that ſpace of time a perſon has lived, the whole time of life; alſo certain periods into which chronologers and hiſtorians have divided time ſince the creation, which are commonly ſix: The firſt extends from the beginning of the world to the deluge, and comprehends 1656 years. The ſecond, from the deluge to Abraham's coming into the land of promiſe, in 2082, containing 426 years. The third from Abraham's entrance into the promiſed land, to the deliverance of the Hebrews out of Egypt, in the year of the world 2523, including 430 years. The fourth, from the going out of Egypt to the foundation of the temple by Solomon, in the year of the world 2992, containing 479 years. The fifth from Solomon's laying the foundation of the temple to the Babyloniſh captivity, in the year of the world 3416, containing 424 years. The ſixth, from the Babyloniſh captivity to the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, which happened in the year of the world 4000, and in the fourth year before the vulgar æra, and includes 584 years.

A'GENCY (S.) the office of doing buſineſs, or tranſacting affairs for another; and ſometimes it means the money or reward paid for one perſon's acting or doing buſineſs for another.

A'GENT (S.) a factor, or perſon who does buſineſs for another; a reſident or under-ambaſſador that takes care of the affairs of his prince at a foreign court; in Philoſophy, that by which any thing is done or effected is called the agent; in Divinity, the diſpute runs very high, whether a man is an agent or patient, that is, whether he is capable of doing or refuſing any particular act, and thereby make himſelf accountable or not, at the day of judgment, for what is done in this life.

AGGLU'TINATE (V.) to glue or ſtick one thing to another; alſo to thicken the natural fluids or moiſture of the body, in order to render it more nutrimentive.

AGGRANDI'ZE (V.) to heap honours upon a perſon, to enlarge upon his qualifications or fortune, to promote, raiſe, or advance to great honour.

A'GGRAVATE (V.) to heighten or enlarge a ſmall fault into a great one, to provoke a perſon to anger by ill uſage.

AGGRAVA'TION (S.) provoking, enlarging, ſtirring up to anger.

A'GGREGATE (V.) to collect, or gather together many particulars into one heap or total ſum.

A'GGREGATE (S.) the total, or whole maſs of many particulars added or collected together.

AGGREGA'TION (S.) a gathering, adding, or collecting many things together into one heap, total, or ſum.

AGGRE'SS (V.) to aſſault firſt, or to begin a quarrel.

AGGRE'SSION (S.) the act of firſt aſſaulting or ſetting upon a perſon, the beginning of a quarrel.

AGGRE'SSOR (S.) the perſon who firſt begins a quarrel, either by ill language, offenſive behaviour, or blows.

AGGRIE'VANCE (S.) wrong, injury, affliction, or trouble.

AGGRIE'VE (V.) to afflict, trouble, wrong, or injure.

A'GILE (A.) nimble, ſwift, dexterous, quick, briſk, lively, &c.

AGI'LITY or A'GILNESS (S.) activity, ſwiftneſs, dexterity, livelineſs, &c.

A'GIO (S.) a term in Merchandize, uſed particularly where there are banks, that circulate foreign bills; and is the ſame with premio or reward, being the difference between the current money, and ſuch bills or ſtock in that bank, which in Holland, Venice, &c. is ſometimes 2, 3, 4, or 5 per Cent. advance in favour of the bank.

A'GITABLE (A.) any thing that may be moved, diſturbed, fretted, or fermented.

A'GITATE (V.) to move, ſtir up, excite; to vex, fret, or teaze.

AGITA'TION (S.) a ſtirring, ſhaking, tumbling, or toſſing; alſo particularly applied to the enthuſiaſtick diſtortions of the voice and body, uſed by the people called French prophets.

AGITA'TOR (S.) a promoter or ſtirrer up of a matter or buſineſs, an incendiary, one who ſtirs up the coals of contention, a manager of a buſineſs or affair; ſo thoſe perſons who in the time of the civil wars in 1647, were choſe out of every regiment of the parliament's army, to ſit in council, and manage affairs, were called agitators.

A'GNAIL (S.) the ſoreneſs that ariſes from the ſtripping up of the fleſh in thin ſlices at the bottom and corners of the nails.

AGNA'TION (S.) in the Civil Law, is that tie or bond of relation, that is between the male deſcendants of the ſame father.

AGO' (Part.) ſpoken of ſomething that has been done ſome time.

A'GONY (S.) violent pain, the pangs of death; alſo an extraordinary affliction or diſturbance of the mind, by which it feels the pain of fear, fright, amazement or terror.

AGREE' (V.) to yield or conſent to, to allow, to compoſe a difference, to bargain.

AGREE'ABLE (A.) pleaſant, ſuitable, condeſcenſive, beautiful, charming.

AGREE'ABLENESS (S.) pleaſantneſs, ſuitableneſs.

AGREE'MENT (S.) the being of the ſame mind, judgment, or opinion; a ſettling the conditions of a contract or bargain, a reconciling diſputes, or arbitrating differences.

A'GRICULTURE (S.) husbandry, the art of manuring, plowing, ſowing, and improving land to the beſt advantage.

AGROU'ND (A.) not capable of ſtirring, ſhipwreck'd, non-pluſs'd, quite overcome.

A'GUE (S.) a diſeaſe that afflicts the patient by involuntary ſhaking, preceding which he is taken with a violent coldneſs or chillneſs: There are many varieties or ſpecies of it, and as many pretended ſpecificks for its cure; it is properly an intermitting fever.

A'GUISH (A.) of or belonging to an ague, cold, chilly, or ſhivering.

AH (Part.) a ſudden expreſſion of ſorrow or pity.

AID (S.) help, aſſiſtance, comfort, ſupport, or relief; in Law, a tax or ſubſidy; alſo an officer called an aid de camp.

AID (V.) to help, ſuccour, aſſiſt, relieve.

AIL (V.) to be ſick, or out of order.

AIL or AILMENT (S.) a diſorder, or ſlight indiſpoſition of body.

AIM (S.) the mark or point to which a perſon directs his courſe or actions, the deſign a perſon has formed in his mind, and ſtrives to accompliſh.

AIM (V.) to direct or ſhoot at, to bend all one's power or capacity to do a certain matter or thing.

AIR (S.) a Muſical Term, ſignifying the general bent or inclination of the compoſition; alſo a particular tune played alone, without either a baſs or any other part to accompany it; alſo the way of behaving one's ſelf in converſation is called a clownish or genteel air, according as the perſon behaves agreeably or otherwiſe. In Philoſophy, air is that fluid in which we move and breathe, and without which we cannot ſubſiſt; ſome of its properties are, that the particles of which it conſiſts, give way to every ſmall impreſſion, and move freely among one another; and thereby is known to be a fluid. So that whatever force preſſes upon air, preſſes in all manner of directions at the ſame time; and as the preſſure increaſes, ſo does its denſity; and as the preſſure decreaſes, it expands itſelf. The force that compreſſes common air is the weight of the atmoſphere, and its ſpring is equal to that weight, for they always balance each other, and produce equal effects. Experience ſhews us, that the denſity of the air is proportional to the force that compreſſes it; and conſequently the air conſiſts of particles repelling each other with a force reciprocally proportional to their diſtance. The repellent force of each particle of air terminates on the neareſt particles, otherwiſe the air contained in any veſſel would be condenſed near the ſides. If the diſtance of the particles of air in the receiver of an air-pump be only ſeven times greater after exhauſting, than it was before, the mercury in the gage will riſe within leſs than one eighth of an inch of its utmoſt height, according to the preſent weight of the atmoſphere; for the ſpring of the air is as the cube of the diſtance of its particles; therefore the ſpring before exhauſting is to the ſpring after exhauſting, as 1 to 343. The repulſive virtue of the particles of the air is not to be overcome, and changed into attraction, by any known force whatever; therefore it is concluded the particles of air are produced from metals, or ſuch like hard and ponderous ſubſtances: Wherefore, when water is changed into vapour, by having its parts ſeparated, and put into a ſtate of repulſion, the vapour is lighter than air; for which reaſon watry vapours float in the air, and are raiſed up to a conſiderable height in the atmoſphere, where its weight, and conſequently its preſſure and denſity, is leſs than near the ſurface of the earth. Hence it follows, that a moiſt atmoſphere is heavier than a dry and clear atmoſphere, cæteris paribus, by ſo much as the quantity of ſuſpended vapours in the firſt caſe exceeds the quantity of ſuſpended vapours in the ſecond. Moiſt vapours leſſen the elaſticity of the air, becauſe the force of repulſion in the particles of watry vapours is leſs than in the particles of air; therefore, if there be two columns of atmoſphere of the ſame diameter and weight, that which contains the moſt watry vapour, is ſpecifically heavier than the other, and conſequently ſhorter. The preſſure of the atmoſphere upon every ſquare inch of ſpace, at or near the ſurface of the earth is about 15 pounds avoirdupoiſe weight; for the preſſure of the atmoſphere upon every ſquare inch is equal to the preſſure of a column of mercury, whoſe baſe is a ſquare inch, and altitude 30 inches. A cubick inch of mercury weighs ſomeſomething more than 8 ounces avoirdupoiſe; ſo that 30 cubick inches will weigh 15 pounds. If the air was a compreſſed fluid, the height of the atmoſphere would be 29040 feet, or ſomething more than 5 miles, reckoning 5280 feet to a mile, according to our Engliſh ſtandard; for the preſſure of one inch altitude in water is equal to the preſſure of 850 inches altitude in air; and the preſſure of one inch altitude of quickſilver is equal to the preſſure of 13 $\frac{4}{5}$ inches altitude of water; therefore the preſſure of one inch altitude of quickſilver is equal to the preſſure of 11616 inches altitude in air; and the preſſure of 30 inches altitude of quickſilver is equal to the preſſure of 348480 inches, or 29040 feet of altitude of air: But the atmoſphere muſt extend to a much greater height than 5 miles, as the air is an elaſtick fluid, and expands itſelf at all altitudes, in proportion as the preſſure of the incumbent part of the atmoſphere decreaſes. Dr. Halley firſt found out and demonſtrated, that if altitudes in the atmoſphere are taken in arithmetical proportion increaſing, the denſities of the air, and conſequently the heights of the mercury ſuſpended in a tube, ſhall be in geometrical proportion decreaſing; and from thence he ſhewed how to determine the height of the mercury at any aſſigned height in the air; and è contra, having the height of the mercury given to find the height in the air. If the logarithm of any number leſs than 30 be ſubſtracted from the logarithm of 30, and the difference be multiplied by 58709, the product will give the height in the air, expreſſed in feet; and the aſſumed number leſs than 30 ſhall be the correſpondent height of the mercury, expreſſed in inches. Hence the following table is eaſily made.

heights	14 — 16	degrees of the
in the	21 — 64	air's expan-
air.	28 — 256	ſion.
	35 — 1024
	42 — 4096

The height of the mercury, anſwering to each of thoſe heights in the air, is found by dividing 30 inches by the degrees of the air's expanſion: Wherefore, at the height of 42 miles in the air, the height of the mercury would be little more than the hundredth part of an inch. Puy de Domme is a mountain near Clermont in France, at the top of which the mercury ſhall ſtand at about 27 inches, when it ſtands at about 30 inches at the bottom of the mountain; therefore the perpendicular height of the mountain is about 2686 feet, or ſomething more than half a mile. All common air is impregnated with a certain vivifying ſpirit, which is abſolutely neceſſary to the preſervation and continuance of animal life. Every time the air paſſes out of the lungs of an animal, part of the vivifying ſpirit is either deſtroyed or left behind; for an animal dies as well for want of freſh air, as for want of air. The vivifying ſpirit in a gallon of common air is ſufficient for one man about the ſpace of one minute. The ſpirit is inflammable, or of a nature proper to feed fire, and capable of being burnt and conſumed thereby; for this ſpirit is actually deſtroyed by making the air paſs thro' the fire, which air ſo burnt will deaden red-hot coals, and extinguiſh flame. Air that has loſt the vivifying ſpirit, may be called a damp, not becauſe it is filled with humid or moiſt vapour, but becauſe it deadens fire, extinguiſhes flame and deſtroys life. The contrivance of warming a room, by ſupplying it with air heated by paſſing thro' the fire, or a red-hot tube, ought to be rejected as dangerous, becauſe it fills the room with an unwholeſome damp, inſtead of freſh air; and therefore in ſmall and cloſe rooms it may prove mortal, unleſs there be a ſpeedy admiſſion of healthful ſpirituous air. The elaſticity of a damp is equal to the elaſticity of common air; for the ſpring of the artificial damp in the receiver is equal to the weight of the atmoſphere. Air may be changed into a damp, not only by paſſing thro' the fire, or thro' the lungs of an animal, but alſo by corruption and putrefaction of the vivifying ſpirit; as in the hold of a ſhip, or in oil-ciſterns, after they have been emptied for ſome time. The ſenſible qualities of things putrified are different from the ſenſible qualities, which they had before putrefaction, and affect the bodies of animals in a different manner; wherefore, during the time that the vivifying ſpirit of the air is putrifying, it may reaſonably be conceived to undergo ſuch changes, as may quite alter its nature, and endue it with malignant and poiſonous qualities of divers kinds and degrees, till the putrefaction is finiſhed, and the ſpirit entirely deſtroyed and diſſipated, as if it had paſſed thro' the fire. If a conſiderable part of the vivifying ſpirit of the air in any country begins to putrify, the inhabitants of that country will be ſubject to an epidemical diſeaſe, which ſhall continue for a certain period, till the putrefaction is quite finiſhed. If, as the putrifying ſpirit occaſions the diſeaſe, ſo the diſeaſed body contributes towards putrifying the ſpirit of the circumambient air, then the diſtemper ſhall not only be epidemical, but peſtilential and contagious. If the vivifying ſpirit of the air be a nitrous ſalt, as is commonly believed, Sir Iſaac Newton, in the 31ſt query at the end of his opticks, deſcribes the manner of its putrefaction.

AIR (V.) to take out of any cloſe confinement, and bring a perſon or thing into the open air; alſo to dry up the dampneſs that may be in a room room, upon linen, or other clothes, &c. by the warmth of the ſun, a fire, &c.

AI'RINESS (S.) briſkneſs, livelineſs, dexterity, activity, gaiety, &c.

AI'RY (S.) the neſt of a bird of prey.

AI'RY (A.) lively, briſk; alſo that has no ſolidity, or that is very light.

AKE or ACH (V.) to be very painful or uneaſy.

AL, an Arabick particle, ſet before words to give them a peculiar emphaſis or ſtrong meaning, and ſignifies excellent, noble, or worthy, as alchymiſt, algebra, &c. which ſee.

A'LABASTER (S.) a white ſtone, ſomewhat like marble, but not veined, ſofter, and not brittle, ſo that it is capable of being wrought into any form: Formerly all veſſels to put liquor and perfumes in, had the general name of alabaſter, of whatever matter they were made. Some old authors are of opinion, that the box that contained the ointment that Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus poured on the head of Jeſus Chriſt, was made of glaſs; ſome affirm that the name of alabaſter denotes the form rather than the matter.

ALA'CRITY (S.) chearfulneſs, briſkneſs, livelineſs; likewiſe pleaſure and content.

ALAMI'RE (S.) in Muſick, the loweſt note but one in the three ſeptenaries of the ſcale of muſick or gamut.

ALAMO'DE (S.) a particular ſort of ſilk worn by women, commonly black; alſo after the mode, or according to the faſhion now in uſe.

ALA'RM or ALA'RUM (S.) the noiſe made by a drum, trumpet, or voice, in a ſudden and haſty manner, to ſignify that preparation muſt be made againſt the invaſion of an enemy, who has in a manner come upon us by ſurprize, or unexpectedly; alſo a particular ſort of clock, that may be ſet ſo as to diſcharge a weight hanging to a line, and thereby ringing a bell with a ſtrong noiſe, on purpoſe to awake perſons at any particular hour of the night.

ALA'RM (V.) to make a ſudden noiſe, to call haſtily; alſo to affright, ſurprize, or put in fear.

ALA'S (Part.) a ſudden expreſſion of grief or ſurprize, ſignifying pity or condolence.

ALA'Y (S.) in Hunting, is the putting freſh dogs into the cry.

St. A'LBANS (S.) a market town in Hertfordſhire, about 20 miles diſtant from London, was formerly a very noted place, taking its name from one Alban, who was the firſt Engliſh martyr for the Chriſtian religion. Edward VI. incorporated this town by his charter, by the name of a mayor and ten burgeſſes, a ſteward and chamberlain, who ſhould have perpetual ſucceſſion, with power to chuſe two burgeſſes to repreſent them in parliament, and determined that the mayor and ſteward only ſhould have power to act as juſtices of the peace, and that the mayor and burgeſſes ſhould hold a court of record before the ſteward weekly on Wedneſdays: that they ſhould have a gaol, and two markets weekly on Wedneſday and Saturday, and three fairs annually, on Michaelmas-day, the 2d of February, and 27th of June, called St. Alban's-day. This borough is a liberty, and hath a peculiar power in itſelf relating to both eccleſiaſtical and civil affairs. There are in the town four wards, each of which have a conſtable and two church-wardens, though there are but three churches in the town.

ALBE'IT (Part.) a ſudden expreſſion, ſignifying a ſuppoſal or conceſſion, that ſomething might have been as was aſſerted.

A'LBION (S.) the ancient name of this iſland, now called England.

ALCA'DE or ALCAI'DE (S.) a name given in Barbary, to him that is intruſted with the adminiſtration of juſtice and the guard of the city: He is the abſolute judge both in civil and criminal matters, and all forfeitures belong to himſelf; but he cannot condemn the guilty to any other puniſhment but death.

A'LCAHOL or A'LCOOL (S.) in the Chymiſts Language, is the pure or refined ſubſtance of any thing ſeparated from the more groſs part, but particularly ſome fine powders or highly rectified ſpirit.

ALCAHO'LIZE (V.) to ſeparate chymically, the pure from the groſſer part of any thing, whether dry or liquid.

ALCALIZA'TION or ALKALIZA'TION (S.) the impregnating a liquor with alcaline ſalt, in order to fit it the better for diſtillation, or make it a proper menſtruum for diſſolving other matters in it.

A'LCHYMY (S.) a name given to the art of purifying metals, and changing the leſs perfect into gold and ſilver; and to the extracting of the ſpirits of minerals and plants. The followers of this art pretend that Adam taught it Enoch, and that from him it deſcended to Moſes and others; ſome are ſo profane as to alledge Solomon's ſong to relate to this ſubject, and to be the epithalamium of the ſun and moon. Pliny ſays, the emperor Caligula was the firſt who prepared natural arſenick, in order to make gold of it, but left it off becauſe the charge exceeded the profit. Others ſay, the Egyptians had this myſtery, which, if true, how could it have been loſt? The Arabians are ſaid to have invented this myſterious art, wherein they were followed by Raimond Lullius, Paracelſus, and others, who never found any thing elſe but aſhes in their furnaces; ſo that Kircher obſerves judiciouſly, that the quadrature of the circle, perpetual motion, inextinguiſhable lamp, and philoſopher's ſtone, have cracked the wits of philoſophers and mathematicians for a long time, without any effect.

A'LCORAN (S.) the book of the Mahometan law: Mahomet compoſed it by the help of Batiras a Jacobin, and Sergius a Neſtorian monk, with the aſſiſtance of ſome Jews.

The

The book is divided into four parts, and each of them into chapters, which have ridiculous titles, as the chapter of the cow, of the emmet, of the ſpider, and of the fly: It is compoſed in Arabian verſe, of a very good ſtile, but in ſo irregular a method, that it is a continued piece of confuſion; the author ſpeaks ſometimes in his own name, and ſometimes (as he pretends) in God's, and at other times in the name of the faithful. Moſt of the principles are the ſame with thoſe of Arius, Neſtorius, Sabellius, and other hereſiarchs. Sometimes he makes uſe of ſcripture hiſtories, which he falſifies, and adds many fables to thoſe of the patriarchs, Chriſt, and John the Baptiſt. This book is in ſuch veneration among infidels, that 'tis death for a Jew or a Chriſtian to touch it, and for a muſſelman, as they call their true believers, if he touch it with unwaſhen hands. They ſay, that God ſent it to Mahomet by the angel Gabriel, writ on parchment made of that ram's ſkin, which Abraham ſacrificed inſtead of his ſon Iſaac; for its doctrine, they ſay, that it is as ancient as the firſt prophets, ſince God chaſtized Adam's children; that Noah repaired what the firſt had loſt; that Abraham ſucceeded the ſecond, Joſeph the third, and Moſes the fourth; that Chriſt eſtabliſhed and Mahomet confirmed it. Our Saviour is therein called the Word, the Soul and Strength of God. They admit prayers for the dead, and purgatory; they believe that the puniſhment of the damned will ceaſe, that the devils will be converted by the Alcoran. They ſay that the ſoul is a part of God, maintain freedom of will and deſtiny: They ſay, there are ſeven paradiſes, all of which Mahomet viewed on a creature called Alborack, bigger than an aſs, and leſs than a mule; the firſt, they ſay is of fine ſilver, the ſecond gold, the third precious ſtones, where there is an angel, betwixt whoſe two hands is 70,000 days journey, and that is always reading; the fourth is of emerald, the fifth cryſtal, the ſixth the colour of fire, and the ſeventh a delicious garden, watered with fountains, and rivers of milk, honey, and wine, with divers ſorts of trees always green, and apples whoſe kernels are changed into girls, ſo handſome and ſweet, that if one of them ſhould ſpit into the ſea, the waters thereof would be bitter no more. This paradiſe, they ſay is guarded by angels, one of which has a cow's head, with 40,000 knots in his horns, and that it is 40 days journey from one knot to the other; others with 70 mouths, and every mouth 70 tongues, and that each tongue praiſes God 70 times a day in 70 different idioms. Before the throne of God there are 14 wax candles lighted, which contain 50 years journey from one end to the other; that all the apartments of heaven are garniſhed with whatever may be conceived moſt pompous, rich, and magnificent; that the bleſſed are fed with the moſt rare and delicious meſſes; that they marry women who are always virgins, &c. Upon the whole, they accommodate their heaven to the moſt ſenſual and brutiſh appetite. They further ſay, that their wives which they have in this world do not enter paradiſe, but behold the happineſs of their huſbands at a diſtance. They ſay hell conſiſts in pains, that ſhall have an end by the bounty of Mahomet, who is to waſh the damned in a fountain, that they may eat the remainders of a feaſt which ſhall be made to the bleſſed. They ſay, that after death two black angels come to the tomb, and reſtoring the ſoul to the body of the deceaſed, aſk it, if it hath carefully obſerved the law? If the dead anſwer yes, the tranſgreſſing members give him the lye, if it be not true, and upbraid him with his crime; whereupon one of thoſe black ſpirits knocks him on the head with a hammer, which drives him ſeven fathom into the earth, where they torment him a long time; and on the contrary, the corpſe of thoſe who are innocent, are preſerved by two white angels to the day of judgment. This book ſays the earth was created in two days; that it is ſuſtained by an ox, which is beneath it, ſtanding on a white ſtone, with his head to the eaſt and tail to the weſt, having 40 horns, and as many teeth betwixt each horn: The ſpace would take a man up a thouſand years to walk continually. The foundations of their law are, 1. Predeſtination, believing that all things are ſo in eternal ideas, that it is impoſſible to prevent the effects. 2. That their religion is to be planted without miracles, diſpute, or contradiction; and that the oppoſers are to be cut off without any other form of proceſs; and that the muſſelmans, who kill unbelievers, deſerve paradiſe. In a ſhort time after Mahomet's death, above two hundred different comments upon this book were publiſhed; whereupon Mohavia, caliph of Babylon, ſummoned an aſſembly at Damaſcus, to reconcile ſo many diſcording opinions; but finding it impoſſible, he choſe ſix of the moſt learned Mahometans out of the aſſembly, and ſhut them up apart, with a command to write what they thought beſt, and moſt agreeable to their judgment; which being done, theſe ſix books called the Alcoran to this day, were compiled and kept, and all the reſt were caſt into the river, with ſevere and ſtrict prohibitions neither to ſpeak, teach or act any thing contrary to what was contained in thoſe ſix books: Notwithſtanding which, there are four different ſects; the firſt and moſt ſuperſtitious, formed by Rabbi Melich, is embraced by the Moors and Arabians; the ſecond commonly called the Imenian, according to the tradition of Haly, which is the moſt rational, followed by the Perſians; the third is that of Omar, and the looſeſt, is venerated by the Turks; the fourth, ſet up by Odmar, which is the moſt ſottiſh, is idolized by the Tartars.

ALCOVE (S.) a particular or retired part of a room or chamber, ſeparated by an eſtrade or other ornament, for a particular purpoſe, as of containing a bed of ſtate, &c. alſo ſmall open ſummer-houſes or ſeats in gardens, with a circular dome or covering, are oftentimes ſo called.

ALDBO'ROUGH (S.) a market-town in Suffolk, 76 computed, and 88 meaſured miles from London, both ſtrongly and pleaſantly ſituated in the valley of Slaughden, having the ſea on the eaſt, and the river Ald on the weſt: It hath three ſtreets in a row, and is a commodious harbour for ſeamen and fiſhermen; upon which account it is fully inhabited by theſe ſort of people. It is a town corporate, governed by two bailiffs, ten capital burgeſſes, and 24 inferior officers; it ſends two burgeſſes to parliament; it has a market weekly on Saturdays, and a fair annually on the 26th of April.

ALDEBA'RAN (S.) among the Aſtronomers, is the name of one of the fixed ſtars called royal, in the fourth degree of Gemini, of the ſame nature with Mars, and which the aſtrologers ſay threatens death or danger, being in the aſcendant with the luminaries, or with Mars or Saturn.

A'LDER (A.) an old Saxon word ſignifying beſt or chief; alſo a tree that grows commonly in bogs or watery grounds.

A'LDERMAN (S.) the ſecond degree of nobility among the Anglo-Saxons, and now the ſecond degree in cities or corporations; the mayor being the head, the aldermen next, and the common council the third or loweſt degree.

A'LDERMAN (S.) this word is derived from the Saxon word ealdorman, that is, a ſenior, or alderman, which by degrees came to ſtand for perſons of the greateſt diſtinction, becauſe ſuch were choſen to diſcharge the higheſt offices, being thoſe whoſe long experience rendered them moſt capable, and whoſe birth and fortunes made them moſt conſpicuous; and as they were generally entruſted with the government of the counties, inſtead of ſaying the governor, it was ſaid the ealdorman of ſuch a county; and by degrees this word came to ſignify the governor of a county or city. While the heptarchy laſted, theſe officers were only during the king's pleaſure; at laſt they became during life, at leaſt for the moſt part. After the Danes were ſettled in England, the title of ealdorman was changed into that of earl, and the Normans introduced that of count, which, tho' different in its original ſignification, meant however the ſame dignity. There were ſeveral ſorts of ealdormen; ſome were properly only governors of a province or county; others were owners of their province, holding it as a fee of the crown; ſo that it was always conſidered as parcel of the ſtate. Thoſe ealdormen or earls were honoured with the titles of reguli, ſubreguli, principes, patricii, and ſometimes rex. Thoſe who were only governors, had the title of ealdormen of ſuch a county, expreſſed ſometimes in Latin by the term conſul. The firſt adminiſtred juſtice in their own name, and appropriated to their own uſe all the profits and revenues of their reſpective counties: The laſt adminiſtred juſtice in the king's name, and had only ſome part of the profits aſſigned them: A third ſort of ealdormen were thoſe, who upon account of their high birth bore the title without any authority, out of which rank the governors were commonly choſe. There were alſo inferior ealdormen in cities and boroughs, who were only ſubordinate magiſtrates, who adminiſter'd juſtice in the king's name, and were dependent on the great ealdormen or earls, which by the name of alderman ſtill continues among us to thoſe inferior officers, whilſt the others are called earls only. The office of ealdorman was wholly civil, and had nothing to do either with military or eccleſiaſtical affairs. What power each of them had, is not eaſy to determine; but they were all obliged to be qualified with ſome knowledge in the law, their buſineſs being to try cauſes, and to take up controverſies according to their ſeveral commiſſions. In the Saxon Times, the biſhop and the ealdorman ſat together in the court to try cauſes, the one proceeding by the canons, and the other by the common law. Part of the ealdorman's juriſdiction was to examine the arms, and to raiſe the militia within ſuch a diſtrict, in order to ſuppreſs a riot, and execute the ſentence of a court of juſtice. He had likewiſe the cognizance of houſe breaking, robbing, &c. Nor was it lawful for any perſon to remove from one place to another without a certificate from the alderman. Now at this time aldermen are aſſociates to the mayor or civil magiſtrate of moſt of our municipal or corporate cities or towns, who form a kind of council, and regulate matters relating to the policy of the place: Sometimes they alſo take cognizance of civil and criminal matters, but very rarely, and in particular caſes. Their number is not limited, being in ſome places 6, and others 26, out of which are annually choſe the mayors or chief magiſtrates, who at the expiration of their mayoralty devolve again into aldermen. The 26 aldermen of London preſide over the 26 wards of the city, and when any of them die, the wardmote return two, out of which the lord mayor and aldermen chuſe one. Heretofore only the aldermen who had been lord mayors, and the three eldeſt who had not yet arrived to that dignity, were juſtices of the peace; but now they are all equally inveſted with that honour.

ALE (S.) all drink or liquor made of malt; but ſince brewing is become ſo great a trade, the milder or ſofter ſort is called ale, and the harſher beer.

ALE'SBURY, AYLE'SBURY or AI'LSBURY (S.) the largeſt and beſt market-town in Buckinghamſhire, ſeated on a part of the river Tame, in the eaſt end of a fruitful vale of the ſame name. In William the Conqueror's time, it was a manor royal, which he beſtowed upon his favourites, to hold of him by this tenure, viz. that they ſhould find litter or ſtraw for the king's bed and chambers whenever he ſhould come that way, and provide him three eels in winter, and three green geeſe in ſummer, beſides herbs for his chamber; and this they were to do thrice a year, if the king came ſo often thither. At preſent the town conſiſts of ſeveral large ſtreets, and the market-houſe, which is a handſome building, ſtands in a kind of ſquare. It has a very convenient town-houſe, where the aſſizes and ſeſſions are annually held; it is 34 computed, and 44 meaſured miles from London: The market, which is well ſtored with all manner of proviſions, is kept on Saturdays, and its principal fairs are held on the 10th of March and Palm-Monday. It is a borough-town, whoſe chief officer is a conſtable, put in by the lord of the manor, or choſe by the inhabitants, and confirmed by him; it ſends two members to parliament.

ALEXA'NDRINE (A.) in Poetry, a metre that conſiſts of two ſyllables more than a common heroick.

ALEXIPHARMICK (A.) remedies of ſuch a nature as are fitted to expel poiſon.

ALFRE'TON (S.) a market-town in Derbyſhire, ſuppoſed to have been firſt built by king Alfred, 100 computed, and 135 meaſured miles from London; its market-day is Monday: This town is much noted for brewing very ſtrong and curious-taſted ale.

A'LGEBRA (S.) is the ſcience of univerſal quantity, whereby difficult queſtions in arithmetick and geometry are ſolved: The methods uſed are two, viz. analytical, or the taking of that which is inquired after, as if it were known, and then going back by conſequences, until it be found to be equal to ſomething really known; or elſe contrariwiſe ſynthetical, that is, the taking of that which is wanted or known, and thence proceeding by conſequences to the diſcovery of what is inquired after or unknown. In this art, quantities or numbers are repreſented by letters, and ſometimes by figures alſo, (as there may be occaſion:) The advantages of thus expreſſing quantities is, that the numbers with their ſeveral operations, which in vulgar arithmetick would be loſt or ſwallowed up, in this are ſo ordered and managed, as to be preſerved diſtinct and in view, and at laſt produce a canon or rule for reſolving not only the particular queſtion propoſed, but in general, any other of the like nature.

ALGEBRA'ICAL (A.) any thing that belongs to, or is performed by algebra.

ALGEBRA'IST (S.) a perſon that reſolves queſtions by, or is ſkilled in algebra.

A'LGORISM (S.) the practice of arithmetick, whether algebraical or numerical.

A'LGORITHM (S.) the art of numerical computation, and particularly means the five rules of arithmetick, called numeration, addition, ſubſtraction, multiplication, and diviſion.

ALHO'LLANTIDE (S.) the firſt day of November, or All-Saints day.

A'LIAS (Part.) alſo, another beſides what has been already named.

A'LIEN (S.) a ſtranger, or foreigner, one not born in the country, nor naturalized; who according to the common law of England, is incapable of inheriting lands till he be naturalized; alſo in corporations, all are called foreigners, who are not freemen thereof by birth, ſervitude, purchaſe or gift.

A'LIEN (V.) to tranſfer the property of a thing to another, to make over an eſtate to a perſon or family that was not the heir by birth, to diſinherit thoſe who would otherwiſe have claimed it.

A'LIENABLE (A.) any thing that may be made over or conveyed to another, &c.

A'LIENATE (V.) to eſtrange or draw away the affections, to make over or give away to ſtrangers.

A'LIENATED (A.) conveyed or made over to a ſtranger.

ALIENA'TION (S.) an eſtranging, giving away, or making over to ſtrangers, a man's effects, effects, or an eſtate, by due courſe of law.

ALI'GHT (V.) to diſmount, or get off the back of an horſe, or other creature whereon a perſon rides.

ALI'KE (A.) in the ſame manner or form with another.

A'LIMENT (S.) any thing that feeds or ſupports nature, whether it be animal or vegetable nouriſhment or food; in Phyſick, it ſignifies the converting the ſubſtance taken in at the mouth into chyle, in order to repair the continual decay of the body, cauſed by perſpiration, or otherwiſe.

ALIME'NTARY or ALIME'NTAL (A.) nouriſhing, feeding; and in Anatomy, that paſſage in the body thro' which the food paſſes, is called the alimentary duct.

A'LIMONY (S.) ſupport, maintenance, food; in Law, what a woman may ſue her huſband for, who is ſeparated from him without being charged with elopement or adultery.

ALIQUA'NT PART (S.) in Arithmetick, is that which is not exactly contained any certain number of times without leaving a remainder, as, 3 is an aliquant part of 10, becauſe it is contained 3 times and 1 over.

ALIQUO'T PART (S.) in Arithmetick, is that number which is contained an exact number of times in another number, without leaving any remainder, as, 5 is an aliquot part of 15, becauſe 3 times 5 is 15.

ALISA'NDERS (S.) the herb lovage.

ALI'VE (A.) that has ſenſe and motion, among Animals; and that has the ſap circulating, &c. in Plants; in Liquors, they are ſo called, when they taſte briſk, &c.

ALIZEE'S (S.) a ſort of wind in the Caribbee iſlands, which carries veſſels from Eaſt to Weſt; they are very regular and periodical, and blow at certain times of the year, in different parts of the Atlantic, Ethiopic, Indian and Pacific ſeas.

A'LKAHEST (S.) in Chymiſtry, a menſtruum which ſome chymiſts pretend is ſuch an univerſal diſſolvent, that it will reduce all mixed bodies into a liquor of its own ſubſtance, and yet retain its ſeminal power and natural form intire.

A'LKALI (S.) the herb glaſs-wort or ſalt-wort; it is a ſort of ſea blite, and one of the chief ingredients in making glaſs; in the common received uſe and ſenſe of the word, it is any matter, which being mixed with an acid, an effervеſcency or ebullition is produced.

Alkali Salts are acids encloſed in little heaps or beds of earth, mixed with oil, by the help of fire.

Fixed Alkalies, in Chymiſtry, are produced by burning the plant kali, &c. and making a lixivium or lee of its aſhes, which being filtrated, and the moiſture evaporated by a gentle heat, the fixed ſalt remains at the bottom of the veſſel; this ſalt becoming by the operations very porous, in which many particles of fire lodge, upon the mixing any acid liquor with it, a violent effervеſcence or ebullition ariſes.

Volatile Alkalies are the volatile ſalts abounding in vegetables; ſo termed, becauſe upon an application of an acid to them a fermentation inſues.

ALKA'LIZATE BODIES (S.) in Chymiſtry, are thoſe whoſe pores are ſo formed, as to be capable of being pierced, and put into a ſtrong motion by an acid.

Alkalizate Spirit of Wine, in Chymiſtry, a very ſtrong rich ſpirit, that when ſet on fire burns quite away without leaving any dregs, and will ſet fire to gun-powder.

ALKALIZA'TION (S.) a converting to an alkali.

A'LKANET (S.) the herb commonly called Spaniſh bugloſs.

ALKE'RMES (S.) a ſweet-meat, wherein the principal ingredient is the berries of kermes, deemed an extraordinary reſtorative, and great friend to nature, by its nutritive quality.

ALL (Part.) the total, the ſum, the aggregate, the whole, each and every one.

ALLANTOI'S ALLANTOI'DES (S.) in Anatomy, one of the coats incloſing the child in the womb, inſerted between the amnion and chorion, and is a receptacle for the urine coming from the bladder by the navel and urachus. In ſeveral beaſts, it is called tunica ſorciminalis, it being ſhaped like a hog's pudding; but in men, and ſome beaſts, it is round.

A'LLAR (S.) in Botany, the alder tree is ſo called.

ALLA'Y or ALLO'Y (S.) any ſort of metal of a meaner or baſer ſort, that is mixed with a purer or finer ſort, as copper or any other metal, with gold or ſilver, in order to make it harder and more workable, or to reduce it to the ſtandard of the mint of any particular country; as here in England, to 11 ounces 2 pennyweights of pure ſilver is put 18 pennyweights of allay or alloy, which makes one pound weight of metal, of which the current coin is made. The ſilverſmiths have divers different quantities of allay mixed with divers ſorts of work, of which toys generally have the greateſt quantity, and conſequently is the coarſeſt of metal.

ALLA'Y (V.) to eaſe, aſſwage, or alleviate ſorrow or pain, to debaſe any metal by mixing with it one of a leſſer value, to reduce any ſubſtance to a leſſer value, by putting to it one of a meaner nature, or different quality; in Carving, it ſignifies to cut up a pheaſant.

ALLE'DGE (V.) to affirm, to bring any thing as a proof, to quote, to inſtance, or bring in precedents.

ALLEGA'TION (S.) a citation, or quoting of any paſſage, a making any aſſertion good by due proof.

ALLE'GIANCE (S.) fidelity or obedience, the natural natural duty which every ſubject owes (and ſwears to keep) to his prince, according to the conſtitution of the kingdom or country where he is born or reſides.

A'NTIMONY (S.) a mineral ſubſtance of a metalline nature, having all the ſeeming characters of a real metal, excepting malleability; ſo that it is what is called a ſemimetal, being a foſſil glebe, compoſed of ſome undetermined metal, combined with a ſulphurous and ſtony ſubſtance; it is found in mines of all metals, but chiefly thoſe of ſilver and lead; that in gold mines is eſteemed the beſt. There are mines of it only, in Hungary, Germany, &c. It is ſometimes called marcaſite of lead, from its being found in clods or lumps reſembling black lead, only it is both harder and lighter. Its texture is particular, being full of little ſhining veins, as brittle as glaſs: Sometimes the the veins are of a red or gold colour intermixed, which is called the male, and the other the female. It fuſes with ſome difficulty in the fire, and diſſolves in water; when dug out of the earth, it is fuſed in a very ſtrong fire, and then poured into cones, called antimonial horns, which is the common ſort uſually ſold in ſhops. Its uſes are very numerous, being a valuable ingredient in ſpecula or concave burning-glaſſes, rendering them of a finer poliſh than they would otherwiſe have; in bell metal it makes the tone or ſound clear. It is mixed with tin to make it hard and white, and with lead to make printers metal, to caſt or found their letters. In Phyſick, its uſes are ſo various, that according to its preparation, Mr. Boyle ſays, that alone, or in company with one or two aſſociates, it is ſufficient to furniſh an apothecary's ſhop, anſwering the phyſician's deſire, whether he wants cathartick, emeticks, diureticks, &c. Antiently it was uſed as paint to blacken both womens and mens eyes, as appears from 2 Kings ix. 30. Jerem. iv. 30; and in eaſtern countries it is uſed for that purpoſe to this day.

ANTINEPHRI'TICKS (S.) medicines good againſt the diſeaſes of the reins and kidneys.

ANTINO'MIANS (S.) hereticks, ſo called for rejecting the law as a thing of no uſe under the goſpel: They ſay, that good works do not further, nor evil works hinder ſalvation; that the child of God cannot ſin; that murder, adultery, drunkenneſs, &c. are ſins in the wicked, but not in them; and therefore Abraham's lying and diſſembling was no ſin; that the child of grace being once aſſured of ſalvation, never doubteth afterwards; that no man ſhould be troubled in conſcience for ſin; that no Chriſtian ſhould be exhorted to perform the duties of Chriſtianity; that an hypocrite may have all the graces, which were in Adam before his fall; that Chriſt is the only ſubject of all grace; that no Chriſtian believeth and worketh any good, but Chriſt only believeth and worketh; that God does not love any man for his holineſs; that ſanctification is no evidence of juſtification.

ANTINO'MY (S.) a difference, oppoſition or contradiction between two laws, or two articles or parts of the ſame law.

ANTIPARALY'TICKS (S.) remedies proper for ſuch as are afflicted with the palſy, &c.

ANTIPERI'STASIS (S.) the action of two oppoſite qualities, whereby the quality oppoſed becomes heightened or intended; or the action whereby a body attacked by another collects itſelf, and becomes ſtronger by ſuch oppoſition; or an intention of the activity on one quality, by the oppoſition of another.

ANTI'PHONE (S.) the anſwer that one ſide of the choir makes to the other, when the pſalm or anthem is ſung between them alternately, as in the common or reading pſalms.

ANTI'PHRASIS (S.) a figure in ſpeech whereby the original ſenſe or meaning of a word is inverted, and applied quite contrary; alſo a figurative or ironical manner of ſpeaking, that intends the contrary to the plain meaning of the words made uſe of.

ANTI'PODES (S.) a name given to thoſe that live under the ſame meridian, and yet are diametrically oppoſite; they have the ſame elevation of their different poles, as they are in different hemiſpheres; ſo that our mid-day is our antipodes mid-night, and vice verſa. In former ages it was thought impoſſible there ſhould be ſuch a place, eſpecially peopled, our good anceſtors not being able to conceive, how it was poſſible to croſs the vaſt ſeas, that in their thoughts ſeparated both hemiſpheres; nay, the more ignorant inland people, whoſe converſation is not with ſeamen, are as difficult to convince at this day; but mathematicians and travellers know infallibly the truth of the fact.

A'NTIPOPE (S.) a name given to thoſe who pretend to paſs for popes, to the prejudice of thoſe who are legally choſen, and ſo cauſe a ſchiſm in the church of Rome. The miſchiefs that have aroſe from theſe fallible infallible gentlemen, the hiſtory of all nations concerned (among which our own is a ſevere inſtance) loudly proclaims.

A'NTIQUARIES (S.) perſons who apply themſelves to the ſtudy of antiquity, by explaining the motto's upon medals, inſcriptions upon ſtatues and publick buildings, endeavouring to recover decayed manuſcripts, and other lights, whereby we may come at the knowledge of times paſt, and their cuſtoms, laws, religion, &c.

A'NTIQUATE (V.) to ſet aſide, repeal, make void, aboliſh, or annul.

ANTI'QUE (A.) ancient, of an old date, or long-ſtanding; particularly uſed by painters, carvers, ſtatuaries, architects, &c. to ſignify buildings, ſtatues, &c. when thoſe arts were in their greateſt perfection among the Greeks and Romans, and before the general defection therein, occaſioned by the irruption of the Goths and Vandals.

ANTI'SCII or ANTOI'CI (S.) any people that live under the ſame meridian, but in different parallels equally diſtant from the equator, ſome in the northern, others in the ſouthern hemiſphere. They have noon and midnight at the ſame time, but their ſeaſons differ; for whilſt one has ſummer, and the longeſt days, the other has winter, and the ſhorteſt days.

ANTISCORBU'TICKS (S.) remedies againſt the ſcurvy.

ANTI'THESIS (S.) the oppoſing or ſetting one thing to or againſt another, by way of compariſon.

ANTITRINITA'RIANS (S.) a general name given to all perſons or ſects, that deny the trinity; tho' it is more particularly applied to the Socinians or Unitarians.

A'NTITYPE (S.) a copy like to the original, or that which anſwers or is prefigured by a type; as the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper is the antitype of the paſchal lamb, or Jewiſh paſſover, &c.

ANTIVENE'REALS (S.) ſuch medicines as are oppoſite to, or good againſt the French diſeaſe or grand pox.

A'NTLERS (S.) ſtarts or branches of a deer's attire, diſtinguiſhed by brow-antlers, which are thoſe next above the head, and the bes-antler, that immediately above the brow-antler.

APA'UME (S.) in Heraldry, is a hand opened ſo, that the full palm appears with the thumb and fingers extended at full length.

APE (S.) an animal, that of all creatures comes neareſt to, or is moſt like to the figure of a man. There are ſeveral ſorts of them; ſome with, and others without a tail; ſome have a longiſh head or ſnout like a dog, others have a rounder head and flatter noſe; the toes of their feet are as long as their fingers; they have generally red hair, inclining to be greeniſh; ſome are all white, ſome red upon their backs, and their breaſt, belly, and inſide of their thighs and arms, white or grey. Theſe creatures have a thouſand ſtratagems to defend and ſave themſelves; they live commonly upon the tops of trees, leaping from one branch to another, with admirable dexterity. On both ſides their jaw they have pockets, where they hide what they deſire to keep. The females have but one young one, which they carry at their backs; when they ſuckle it, they take it in their arms like a woman, and preſent the teat to it. The Egyptians uſed to worſhip them, and ſo do the Indians at this day. The Inhabitants of Goa did not dare to kill an ape, nor a ſerpent, believing them to be ſpirits created by God to puniſh mankind for their ſins.

APE'LITÆ (S.) a ſect of hereticks, that taught, that Chriſt left his body in the air and went into heaven without it.

A'PEPSY (S.) in Phyſick, is that diſorder of the ſtomach called indigeſtion.

APE'RTION or APE'RTURE (S.) the opening of any thing whatever; alſo a hole, ſlit, or crack, made in any ſolid thing, as timber, ſtone, &c. alſo in Architecture, the doors, windows, chimneys, ſtair-caſes, or any other in or out-lets of air, ſmoke, or light, in building, are called apertures; in Geometry, it is that ſpace or diſtance between any two lines that form an angle; in Opticks, the hole next to the object glaſs of a teleſcope or microſcope, through which the light and image of the object come into the tube, from whence they are conveyed to the eye; in the Civil Law, the loſs of a feudal tenure by default of iſſue of him to whom the fee was firſt granted, is called apertura feudi: and the breaking up or opening of the laſt will or teſtament of any perſon, that was ſealed up, is called apertura tabularum.

A'PEX (S.) the uppermoſt point of any thing, the ſummit or very tip of a pillar, or other erected thing; and in Geometry, it is the angular point of a cone, or any ſuch like figure.

APHE'LION or APHE'LIUM (S.) a term uſed in Aſtronomy, ſignifying that point of a planet's orbit, in which the planet is at the greateſt diſtance from the ſun; in the old Aſtronomy, it is called the apogee.

A'PIARY (S.) a place where a perſon keeps or breeds bees.

A'PIS (S.) an ox or bull worſhipped by the Egyptians under this name; one conſecrated to the Sun, which they fed at Heliopolis, which they called Mnevis; and another, to the moon, fed at Memphis, called Apis. Their god Oſiris was worſhipped under the form of this animal, whoſe whole body was to be black, except a white ſquare ſpot upon the forehead. Some ſay it had the figure of an eagle upon its back, and ſome ſay of a creſcent; the hairs of its tail were double, and it had the form of a beetle under its tongue.

When

When a calf was found with theſe marks, it was carried with great joy to the temple of Oſiris, where it was fed, kept, and worſhipped inſtead of the god, as long as it lived, and at its death it was buried with great ſolemnity and mourning; this done, they looked out for another with the ſame marks. Sometimes they were many years before they found one; but when they had, there was a great feſtival kept all over the country.

A'PISH (A.) fooliſh, filly, ridiculous, one given to or delighted with anticks and mimickry.

APOBATE'RION (S.) a farewel ſpeech, ſermon, oration, or poem, at or upon a perſon's going out of his own country, or other place where he had reſided for ſome time, and been kindly entertained.

APO'CALYPSE (S.) a diſcovering or revealing ſomething, particularly applied to the Revelation of St. John: Some have affirmed Cerinthus the heretick to be the author of it; and in the firſt centuries many churches diſowned it to be canonical; but ſince the fourth century it has been generally received. There are many ſpurious books under this name, which have had their abettors, and been affirmed to be wrote, ſome by St. Peter, others by St. Paul, &c.

APOCALY'PTICAL (A.) belonging to, or after the manner of a revelation or viſion.

APOCO'METRY (S.) the meaſuring things at a diſtance, by the help of glaſſes and other inſtruments.

APO'CRYPHAL (A) ſomething not certainly known, or of which the truth or genuineneſs is diſputed, eſpecially applied to books, whoſe authors are diſputed.

APODI'CTICAL (A.) in Logick, is a clear, undeniable proof or demonſtration of any matter or thing in diſpute.

A'POLEPSY (S.) a ſtoppage, hindrance, prevention or intervening of one perſon or thing between another.

APOLLINA'RIANS (S.) a ſect that aroſe in the fourth century, who were the followers of Apollinaris, biſhop of Laodicea, who after he had wrote many uſeful books, eſpecially for the younger Chriſtians, fell into a ſtrange degree of enthuſiaſm, and taught, that the divinity of Chriſt was inſtead of a ſoul to him; that his fleſh was pre-exiſtent to his appearance upon earth, and that it was ſent down from heaven, and conveyed thro' the virgin, as thro' a channel; that there were two ſons, one born of God, the other of the virgin; that Jeſus Chriſt was conceived a pure ſubſtance, and that afterwards the Word deſcended into him, and had ſuch operation in him as in the prophets, but was not united to his nature; that it was only by his good works, that he became great and perfect; that God was crucified; and that Jeſus Chriſt has now no body; with many other ſtrange doctrines.

APO'LLO (S.) one of the falſe gods of the heathens, to whom they attributed oracles, and the art of divination: He is ſaid to be the ſon of Jupiter and Latona, and brother of Diana, born at Delos. He is alſo ſaid to have killed the ſerpent Pitho, becauſe the heat of the ſun dries up the peſtilential vapours of the earth: He was repreſented to wear long hair, in imitation of the ſunbeams; the laurel was conſecrated to him, becauſe the heathens believed, that a laurel leaf being laid under a ſleeping man's pillow, made him dream truly. The fable of his feeding Admetus's ſheep, was to denote, that all creatures receive particular benefit from the nouriſhing warmth of the ſun; and his killing the Cyclops for forging Jupiter's thunderbolts, alluded to the ſun's diſperſing thoſe vapours, that occaſion the changes of the air and various diſtempers in human bodies. He is called the Sun in heaven, Bacchus on earth, and Apollo in hell; and is repreſented with a harp, to ſhew us the harmony of the ſpheres; with a buckler, to ſignify he is the defender of the earth; and with arrows, to denote his power of life and death.

APO'LLYON (S.) is the ſame in Greek, as Abaddon is in Hebrew, both ſignifying the deſtroyer. St. John, Rev. ix. 11. ſays, And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomleſs pit, whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

APOLOGE'TICAL (A.) ſomething ſaid, written, or done, by way of excuſe or defence of any perſon, thing, or matter.

APO'LOGIST or APO'LOGER (S.) one that ſpeaks or writes in defence of himſelf or others.

APOLOGI'ZE (V.) to plead for, defend, or excuſe a perſon or thing.

A'POLOGUE (S.) the moral or application of a fable, or imaginary ſtory or relation contrived for the directing, amending, or improving the life or manners of mankind.

A'POPHTHEGM (S.) the wiſe ſaying, or grave and inſtructive remark of ſome learned, judicious, or pious perſon, couched in a few words.

A'POPLEXY (S.) a diſeaſe that immediately or ſuddenly deprives the patient of the uſe of all his ſenſes, and ſtops the motions of all parts parts of the body, except the heart and lungs, inſtantly; it is ſuppoſed to be occaſioned by an interruption of the paſſage of the blood towards the brain, or by any thing that hinders the influx of the animat ſpirits into the organs of ſenſe, and the parts of voluntary motion. There are many other cauſes aſſigned by different authors. The fit is uſually preceded by a pain in the head, dimneſs and loſs of ſight, memory, and many other ſymptoms. To prevent it, wine, hard labours, exceſſive eating, and ſleeping after dinner, ſhould be avoided, and moderate exerciſe uſed: To cure it, evacuative medicines muſt be taken. In the fit, bleed freely in the jugulars, lay the patient on his back, apply ſtrong volatiles to the noſe, &c. Some recommend cupping rather than veneſection.

APO'STASY (S.) a falling off from, or forſaking the religion which a man had made profeſſion of; the deſpiſing the true religion, and profaning what is commanded to be kept holy. In the Roman Church, it ſometimes means no more than the leaving a religious order, whereof a man had made profeſſion, without a legal diſpenſation. The difference between hereſy and apoſtaſy is, that hereſy forſakes one part of the common, and generally acknowledged faith, but apoſtaſy forſakes and deſpiſes the whole.

APO'STATE (S.) one who forſakes the truth; upon which account, all thoſe who leave, or forſake any particular religious opinion, are by their former companions called apoſtates.

APOSTATI'ZE (V.) to revolt from, or forſake the truth.

APO'STLE (S.) the title of the twelve diſciples of our bleſſed Saviour, who being furniſhed with the ſupernatural gifts of tongues, infallibility and working miracles, were commiſſioned by him to travel all the world over, to make proſelytes and found churches The names of theſe apoſtles are ſo well known, that we need not mention them. Among the Jews, apoſtles were perſons appointed by the patriarch to collect a tax due to the Roman emperors, as appears by the Theodoſian code. Baronius obſerves, that they were called apoſtles, who collected money for repairing the temple. They had likewiſe a commiſſion to ſee that the law of Moſes was punctually obſerved.

APO'STLESHIP (S.) the office, miniſtry, or dignity of an apoſtle.

APOSTO'LICAL or APOSTO'LICK (A.) belonging, conformable, or agreeable to the practice, doctrines, or times of the apoſtles.

APO'STROPHE (S.) in Grammar, is a mark placed over a letter, to ſhew that a vowel is cut off, as in call'd for called, th'audience for the audience; alſo a Rhetorical figure, whereby an orator turns his diſcourſe from the audience to a particular perſon or thing.

APO'THECARY (S.) one who prepares medicines according to the preſcriptions of the doctors; a practiſer in pharmacy.

APOTHE'OSIS (S.) the ceremony of deification, done to perpetuate the memory of ſome great man; and among the Romans, in honour of their emperor. After the ceremony was over, the deified emperor was worſhipped as a god, and was as much revered as any of the other gods: They likewiſe ſwore by his name, and that with ſo much veneration, that a man might with more ſafety forſwear himſelf by Jupiter, than by the emperor's genius, as Minutius Felix obſerves. They likewiſe ſwore by the empreſſes, as we are informed by Dion Caſſius, who tells us, that Caligula permitted the women to ſwear by Druſilla. This honour of deifying the deceaſed emperor was begun by Auguſtus for Julius Cæſar.

APO'TOME (S.) a cutting off, a parting from a thing, and making two or more out of one whole thing; ſo in Mathematicks, it is the remainder or difference between two incommenſurable quantities; and in Muſick, it is the difference between the greater and leſſer ſemi-tone.

APPARA'TUS (S.) the neceſſary preparation for doing ſomething whether publick or private; ſo in the preſent Philoſophy, all the inſtruments uſed to ſhew the experiments, as air-pumps, and their furniture, microſcopes, &c. are called the apparatus. In Surgery, the medicines, bandages, &c. are ſo called: That particular part of ſurgery called lithotomy, or cutting for the ſtone, is particularly called apparatus, which is performed three ways; the one is called the high apparatus, ſaid to be invented by de Franco, and is the moſt ancient, though but lately introduced among us: In this method, an inciſion is made above the groin, along the linea alba, into the fund of the bladder, through which the ſtone is extracted. The great apparatus, invented by John de Romanis about the year 1520, is performed by making an inciſion in the perinæum; and from the number of inſtruments uſed, this is called the great apparatus. The ſmall apparatus is ſo called from the few inſtruments uſed in it: This was invented by Celſus; to perform which, the two fore-fingers are thruſt up the fundament, till they come againſt the ſtone, and drive it to the neck of the bladder, from whence it is extracted through the inciſion of the ſcrotum.

APPA'REL (S.) the habit or clothing that is worn by any particular nation or people.

APPA'RENT (A.) plain, eaſy to be ſeen, viſible without difficulty, evident, conſpicuous, demonſtrative.

APPARI'TION (S.) the appearing of a ſtar, or other luminary that was not before ſeen; alſo a ſpectre, by the vulgar called a ſpirit, ſuppoſed to be the ghoſt or ſoul of ſome perſon dead, that comes to make ſomething that is unknown, known. Abundance of idle tales have been told about ſuch apparitions; but of late years people grew wiſer than to be ſo deluded or impoſed upon.

APPA'RITORS (S.) officers in the eccleſiaſtical court who cite perſons to appear; in the Univerſity, the beadle or officer who carries the mace before the maſters, faculties, &c. are ſo called.

APPEA'L (V.) to ſubmit, or refer a matter in diſpute to ſome other court or perſon of greater authority.

APPEA'L (S.) in Law, is the removing a cauſe out of an inferior into a ſuperior court; in common Converſation, an appeal is referring a matter in diſpute to the judgment or deciſion of one or more indifferent perſons.

APPEA'R (V.) to come in view, to be in ſight, to come to a place according to appointment; alſo to make a ſhew or pretence of doing what is required, without an intention of performing it.

APPEA'RANCE (S.) the external ſurface of a thing, or that which ſtrikes the ſenſes or imagination, which according to the diſtance, ſituation, or other accident, may communicate to the perception ſomething very different from what the thing really is; in Law, an appearance is the defendant engaging to anſwer a cauſe or action entered againſt him in ſome court of judicature.

APPEA'SABLE (A.) that is capable of being reconciled or pacified, that may be wrought upon and brought to a good humour, &c.

APPEA'SE (V.) to pacify, to bring an angry perſon into temper, or to ſatisfy or allay the fury of a diſordered mind.

London, from the New River, Thames, &c. are full as uſeful and ingenious, tho' not ſo pompous.

AQUA'RIANS (S.) a ſect in the primitive church, who forbore the uſe of wine even in the ſacrament, and uſed nothing but water. The original occaſion was the perſecution the Chriſtians were under, for which reaſon they met ſecretly, and in the night, where for fear of diſcovery they uſed water inſtead of wine, when they received the ſcrament, which precaution riveted itſelf into an opinion, that it was a duty, and when they could uſe it with ſafety, rejected it as unlawful. Tatian, in the ſecond century, is ſaid to be head of this ſect, who held many abſurd notions.

AQUA'RIUS (S.) the eleventh ſign in the Zodiack, and next to Capricorn; it riſes about the 16th of January. The Mythologiſts make Ganymede ſhine in this conſtellation; for Jupiter being charmed with his beauty, ordered an eagle to truſs him, and bring him into the ſkies, where this pretended deity made him his cup-bearer. Others ſay, this ſign is ſo named, becauſe when it appears in the horizon, it is commonly moiſt, rainy weather. The ſtars in this conſtellation in Ptolemy's catalogue are 45, in Tycho's 40, in Flamſteed's 90; its character is ♒.

AQUA'TICK or AQUA'TILE (A.) watry or belonging to the water; ſo thoſe trees or creatures, that grow, breed, or live in or near the water, are called aquaticks.

A'RACK or A'RRACK (S.) a ſpirituous liquor imported from the Eaſt-Indies, chiefly uſed for drams or punch: The word is Indian, ſignifying any thing ſtrong or diſtilled, as brandy, &c. are by them called Engliſh arrack; but we apply it to that liquor only, diſtilled from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by inciſion out of the cocoa nut tree: This toddy is a very pleaſant liquor of itſelf, when drank new, purging thoſe that uſe it; when ſtale, is heady, and makes good vinegar. The Engliſh at Madraſs uſe it as yeaſt or leven to raiſe their bread. Goa arrack is eſteemed the beſt, tho' the Batavian is much the ſtrongeſt: The firſt is drawn off in earthen veſſels, and the latter in copper ſtills, which makes it more fiery, and not ſo well reliſhed.

A'RBITER or ARBITRA'TOR (S.) one choſe to ſettle a difference between contending perſons, an umpire, or referree.

A'RBITRARINESS (S.) a doing or acting any thing purely by, or according to one's own will, uncontroulableneſs, without any ſuperior.

A'RBITRARY (A.) whatever depends upon one's own will and pleaſure, any thing that may be done without giving an account for to another.

A'RBITRATE (V.) to award or determine a matter that was referred to a perſon, to give ſentence in or adjudge a matter.

ARBI'TREMENT (S.) a power given by two or more contending perſons, to ſome other perſon or perſons, to adjudge, determine and award the matter in diſpute, to which they oblige themſelves to comply or agree to, under a certain penalty, fine, or mulct.

ARCH (A.) chief or principal of any order, degree or dignity; ſo arch-biſhop is the chief or head biſhop, arch-duke the principal or chief prince or duke, &c. Sometimes it ſignifies unlucky, merry, or waggiſh; alſo crafty, dextrous, very notorious, or arrant, as an arch-rogue, or traitor, is a notorious rogue, the ring-leader, or principal traitor; ſo arch-wag means ſometimes a merry fellow, and ſometimes a ſubtle, cunning, dextrous, cheating perſon.

ARCH (S.) in Architecture, is the roof or upper part of a building, made curved or circular; in Geometry, it is a part or portion of a circle, or other curve-lined figure, leſs than half; by arches of circles the quantity of all angles is meaſured and determined; the whole circle being divided into 360 equal parts, the angular point is ſuppoſed to be the center of the circle, and the whole leg, or ſuch part of it as is uſed, is the ſemi-diameter or whole line; and the number of ſuch degrees, contained between the legs, is the meaſure of the angle, which is denominated according to the number it contains.

ARCH-A'NGEL (S.) is the name of the chief or principal angel in ſcripture, called alſo Michael; alſo the name of a great city in the Muſcovite dominions; and in Phyſick, it is the name of an herb, &c.

ARCH-BI'SHOP (S.) the chief or metropolitan biſhop, who has ſeveral ſuffragan biſhops under him: This title was firſt introduced in the Eaſt about 340, but was then only honorary, and given to all biſhops of great cities. England is divided into two, viz. Canterbury and York, who are called primates and metropolitans.

politans. Canterbury had formerly juriſdiction over Ireland, and was ſtiled a patriarch. He enjoyed ſome ſpecial marks of royalty, as to be patron of a biſhoprick, viz. Rochester, to make knights, coin monies, &c. He is ſtill the firſt peer of England, and next to the royal family, having precedence of all dukes and great officers of the crown. He has, by common law, the power of probate of wills and teſtaments. and granting letters of adminiſtration; alſo to grant licences and diſpenſations in all caſes formerly ſued for in the court of Rome, and not repugnant to the law of God. He holds ſeveral courts of judicature, as court of arches, and of audience, the prerogative court, and court of peculiars. The archbiſhop of York has the ſame power in his province with that of Canterbury; has precedence of all dukes not of the royal blood, and all officers of ſtate, except the lord high chancellor.

ARCH-CHA'MBERLAIN (S.) an officer in the empire, much like our lord, or great chamberlain; the elector of Brandenbourg is appointed hereditary chamberlain of the empire, by the golden bull, and in that quality bears the ſceptre before the emperor, walking on the left hand of the elector of Saxony. At ſome ſolemnities he ſerves on horſe-back, as do the other electors, carrying a baſon with a towel in his hand, from which alighting, he ſets it for the emperor to waſh. His vicar, or ſub-arch-chamberlain, is the prince of Hohenzollern.

ARCH-CHA'NCELLOR (S.) anciently preſided over the notaries or ſecretaries of the court: This office chiefly obtained in France under the two firſt races of their kings, and afterwards in the empire of Germany.

ARCH-DEACON (S.) a church officer whoſe buſineſs is to viſit the pariſhes within a certain diſtrict: This name was given to the firſt or eldeſt deacon, who attended on the biſhop without any power; but ſince the council of Nice his function is become a dignity, and ſet above that of a prieſt, though anciently it was quite otherwiſe. He was the biſhop's chief miniſter for all external concerns, and particularly the temporalities. In the tenth century they were conſidered as having juriſdiction in their own right, or attached to their office, with a power of delegating it to others; but this being thought too much, their power was leſſened by increaſing their number. There are ſixty archdeacons in England, whoſe office is to viſit every other year, to enquire into reparations and moveables belonging to the church, reform abuſes in eccleſiaſtical matters, and bring the more weighty affairs before the biſhop; beſides which they have alſo a power to ſuſpend, excommunicate, and in many places to prove wills, and in ſome to inſtitute to benefices. One part of their office is to induct all clerks into their benefices within their juriſdiction; and by the act of uniformity, he is now obliged to be in prieſt's orders. Many of them have their courts and official, as biſhops have.

AREO'METER (S.) an inſtrument to meaſure the denſity or gravity of fluids, commonly made of glaſs, with a round hollow neck, terminating in a long ſlender neck, hermetically ſealed at top; there being firſt as much running mercury put into it, as will ſerve to balance, or keep it ſwimming in an erect poſition; the neck is divided into degrees, and by its depth of ſinking, the quality of the liquor, as to lightneſs, is concluded.

AREO'PAGUS (S.) the place where the Areopagites or Athenian judges aſſembled, ſituated upon an eminence, which was formerly near the middle of the city, but at preſent it is out of it; there are ſtill ſome remains of it viſible in the foundations, which form a ſemi-circle, built with ſquare ſtones of a prodigious ſize, which ſupport a terraſs or platform of about 140 paces, which was the court: In the midſt was a tribunal cut in a rock, and all about were ſeats cut out of the ſtone, where the judges heard cauſes in the open air without any covering; at a ſmall diſtance were ſome caves hewn in the rock, where it is ſuppoſed the priſoners were kept, who were to appear before the judges. They pronounced ſentence in the night, that they might not be affected by the ſight of the perſons who ſpoke, and defended themſelves. St. Paul having preached at Athens againſt the plurality of gods, and declaring, that he came to reveal that God to them, whom they adored without knowing him, was carried before the Areopagites, as the introducer of a new religion, where he ſpoke with ſo much wiſdom, that he converted Dionyſius, one of his judges, and was diſmiſſed without any one's having any thing to ſay to him.

A'RGAL (S.) that hard matter, or dy'd lees, that condenſes and ſticks to the wine veſſels, frequently called tartar.

A'RGENT (S.) a term uſed in Heraldry, for ſilver, or the colour white, uſed in the coats of gentlemen, knights, and baronets. Barons and noblemen have that white called pearl; and in the arms of ſovereign princes, it is called luna; it is expreſſed in engraving by leaving the part plain without any ſtrokes of the graver.

A'RGUE (V.) to reaſon, debate, diſpute, diſcourſe.

A'RGUMENT (S.) is a medium, from the connexion of which with two extremes, the connexion of the two extremes themſelves is inferred; or it is certain reaſons or allegations, why ſuch or ſuch a thing is done, which is either probable and rational, or authoritative. It is ſometimes taken for the heads, contents, or ſubject, upon which a book or diſcourſe is made.

ARGUMENTA'TION (S.) the art of reaſoning powerfully and ſtrongly, by inferring, concluding, convincing, &c. from certain premiſes laid down, admitted or granted.

ARGUME'NTATIVE (A.) convincing by reaſoning or arguments.

A'RIA (S.) in Muſick, is an air, ſong, tune, or leſſon.

A'RIANISM (S.) the doctrine of Arius, who, in the beginning of the 4th century, taught, that Chriſt, or the Son, was not God conſubſtantial with the Father, but the firſt of created beings, &c. This doctrine ſpread almoſt over the whole church for a few years; but in 321, was condemned by the council of Nice, after which it infected the Eaſt very much; and in ſucceeding times was divided into many branches, and called by ſundry names; and at this time is too common to be ſecret.

A'RIANS (S.) ſuch perſons as immediately were the diſciples, or that now do profeſs the opinions or doctrines of Arius, eſpecially relating to the trinity.

A'RIES (S.) a conſtellation in the heavens, figured by a ram; and by the aſtronomers is reckoned as one of the 12 ſigns of the Zodiack, which in Ptolemy's catalogue conſiſted of 18 ſtars, in Tycho's 21, and in the Britiſh of 65; for the latitudes and longitudes whereof conſult the aſtronomers.

ARISTOTE'LIANISM (S.) the philoſophical doctrines or opinions of the old philoſopher Ariſtotle, particularly thoſe contained in his four books de Cælo, and his eight books of Phyſicks, which were univerſally embraced, till the the time of Copernicus, and now almoſt as univerſally rejected. His followers are ſometimes called Ariſtotelians, and ſometimes Peripateticks.

ARI'THMANCY (S.) a pretended ſort of prophefying, or divination by certain numbers.

ARITHME'TICAL (A.) belonging to arithmetick.

ARI'THMETICK (S.) is that part of the mathematicks, that conſiders the properties and powers of numbers, and numerical quantities; and is chiefly uſed in trade, and calculations for aſtronomical purpoſes: It is variouſly denominated, as theorical, practical, inſtrumental, literal, tabular, logarithmical, ſpecious, numeroſe, and many others, according to the mode of explaining or performing its propoſition.

ARK (S.) a cheſt or coffer; the baſket wherein Moſes was expoſed on the Nile, is called an ark of bulruſhes; it was a ſort of bark, in form much like a cheſt or trunk: Hiſtorians inform us, that the Egyptians uſed barks made of bulruſh on the Nile, and that they were ſo light as to be carried on their ſhoulders, when they met with falls of water which prevented their paſſage. The cheſt wherein the two tables of the covenant, the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod were depoſited, was called the ark of the covenant; it was made of Shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold; it was two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high All round the top of it was a kind of gold crown, and two cherubims were faſtened to the cover; on the two ſides of it were four rings of gold, two on each ſide, thro' which ſtaves were put, by the help whereof they carried it, as they marched thro' the wilderneſs. The mercy-ſeat hung over the ark, and covered it; by the account of the Rabbins, it was made of beaten gold, of the thickneſs of a hand's breadth: There were two cherubims of the ſame metal placed at each end, their wings expanded, and looking inwards towards each other. Thus the mercy-ſeat was ſorrounded, the cherubims wings meeting each other. It was here the Shechinah, or divine preſence reſted, and was viſibly ſeen in the appearance of a cloud over it; and from hence directions and oracular reſponſes were given. Before this mercy-ſeat the high prieſt appeared once a year, on the day of expiation, to make an atonement for the ſins of all the people. Alſo the building which was erected by Noah at the command of God, into which entered every living thing that God intended not to deſtroy. This remarkable ſtructure was begun by Noah in the year of the world 1532, and 2497 before the Incarnation; he was directed by God Almighty in the dimenſions of it. Noah was five hundred years old, when he received his commandment, and ſpent about a hundred years in building it. The ark was three hundred cubits in length, fifty in breadth, and thirty cubits high: Moſt interpreters ſuppoſe this cubit to be about a foot and a half, and that it was not the geometrick one of ſix feet. The ark was contrived with three floors; the firſt for beaſts and cattle; the ſecond for fodder and proviſions; and the third for the birds and Noah's family: It was not made like a ſhip, but came near the figure of a ſquare, growing gradually narrower to the top: There was a door in the firſt floor, and a great window in the third. In Mathematicks, ark means the ſame with arch; which ſee.

ARM (V.) to put in a condition of defence, either by arguments or weapons; to furniſh with ſword, gun, and other habiliments of war; in Gunnery, to arm a ſhot is to twiſt or roll oakum, rope-yarn or old clouts about the end of an iron bar, which is put thro' the ſhot.

A'RYTHMUS (S.) a ſinking, failing, or ceaſing of the pulſe, ſo that its motion can ſcarce be diſcerned.

AS (S.) among the Romans, was both a weight and coin; when conſidered as a weight, it was a pound; when a coin, at different times it had different weights, but always the ſame value; at firſt it weighed a pound or twelve ounces; at the firſt Punick war, A. R. 513, a pound made 6 aſſes; at the ſecond Punick war, 12; and by Papirius, A. R. 563, into 24, where it continued all the time of the commonwealth, in value about three farthings ſterling; ſometimes as ſignified an integer or whole thing divided into 12 parts.

AS (Part.) likeneſs, compariſon, ſimilitude, &c.

St. A'SAPH (S.) an ancient city of Flintſhire, in North Wales, diſtant from London 159 computed, and 212 meaſured miles, more noted for its antiquity, than for either its largeneſs or beauty: It is ſeated on the river Elwy, where it receiveth the Cluyd, over each of which there is a bridge. It is an epiſcopal ſee, founded by Kentigern, a Scot, biſhop of Glaſgow, in 560, who ordain'd one Aſaph, a godly man, to be his ſucceſſor, from whom the city takes its name. Its preſent condition is but mean, having little to boaſt of, but its cathedral; it hath a ſmall market on Saturday.

A'SAPHY (S.) a hoarſeneſs, or low tone of the voice, occaſioned by a great cold or ill conſtruction of the organs of ſpeech.

ASBE'STINE (S.) a certain ſort of paper or cloth, which being thrown into the fire, inſtead of being conſumed, is only cleanſed and purified from any dirt or filth, it might have contracted, without being conſumed or ſenſibly diminiſhed.

ASBE'STOS (S.) a ſtone, ſomething reſembling Venetian talc, from whence the matter of the aſbeſtine cloth or paper is taken; it is alſo called amiantbus; the word properly ſignifies an incombuſtible body, or one not to be deſtroyed by fire.

ASCA'RIDES (S.) ſmall worms that breed in the ſtreight gut, which by their continual motion make the patient very uneaſy; vulgarly called the arſe worms in human bodies, and bots in horſes.

ASCE'ND (V.) to riſe, go higher, or get up, in reſpect to the preſent place or condition a perſon may be in.

ASCE'NDANT (S.) with the Aſtrologers, is that degree of the ecliptick, which riſes at a perſon's nativity; in Civil Matters, to have the aſcendant over a perſon, is to have a power or influence over him, ſo that he will do a thing, thro' the intereſt of that perſon, that is contrary to his own judgment or inclination.

ASCE'NSION (S.) the moving or going upwards; in Aſtronomy, there are two kinds, viz. right and oblique aſcenſion; the right is that part or degree of the ſun or ſtar, in the equinoctial, reckoning from Aries, which in a right ſphere, riſes, or comes to the meridian with it; the oblique is the ſame in an oblique ſphere, and is reckoned or counted from weſt to eaſt, and changes according to the latitude of the place. The difference between the right and oblique aſcenſion is called the aſcenſional difference. But in common, this word means that feſtival, which the Chriſtian church has inſtituted, to ſolemnize the day in which our Saviour went up, or aſcended into heaven, forty days after his reſurrection, his apoſtles, and diſciples, to the number of about 120, being eye-witneſſes. The papiſts ſay, that the holy fathers, who were dead and in limbo, were at this time delivered, and had a viſible triumph over death and hell; but the Scriptures poſitively affirm, the apoſtles ſaw nothing but angels in the ſhape of men, who aſſured them that Chriſt ſhould one day deſcend from heaven, in the ſame manner they had ſeen him go up. Some Chriſtians very poſitively affirm, that Chriſt left a viſible mark of this glorious action, viz. the print of his feet, on that part of mount Olivet, where he laſt ſtood; and St. Jerom ſays, that it was viſible in his time, and goes farther, ſaying, that when a church was built upon the ſpot, it could neither be cieled or covered over that part, for which reaſon ſo much of the dome was always left open. Optatus, biſhop of Melevis, Paulinus of Nola and others are of the ſame opinion. About the year 700, Venerable Bede, in his book of the holy place, relates that it was then remaining: But at laſt the Mahometans took away theſe miraculous remains, and with the ſame ſtone blocked up the eaſtern door of the church built there; ſo that thoſe whoſe curioſity might lead them now to view it, have not the opportunity to confirm by ſeeing themſelves, what the others have affirmed with ſo much confidence.

ASCE'NT (S.) the ſteepneſs of a hill or mountain, reckoning from the ground or plain upwards towards the ſky; alſo the act of moving upwards; in Logick, it is that ſort of reaſoning, where they riſe from particulars to univerſals.

A'SHBURN (S.) a ſmall market-town in Derbyſhire, ſeated on the river Doule, in a rich ſoil, from London 108 computed miles; its market is on Saturday weekly.

A'SHBURTON (S.) a large borough town in Devonſhire, that ſends two members to parliament; is compoſed of ſeveral ſtreets, with a large and beautiful church, and hath a very good market weekly on Saturdays, well ſtored with corn, cattle, ſheep, and all other proviſions; it is a great thorough-fare upon the London road, and diſtant from it 153 computed, and 101 meaſured miles.

A'SHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH (S.) a very pleaſant town in Leiceſterſhire, ſituate between two parks, has weekly a market on Saturdays, and conſiſts of one good ſtreet, in which ſtands a neat ſtone croſs; it has four fairs annually, which are famous for being well ſtocked with large young horſes; it is diſtant from London 89 computed, and about 98 meaſured miles; it has one large handſome pariſh-church, called St. Helen's; the living is a vicarage, whoſe great tythes are impropriate; the patron is the earl of Huntingdon, who is impropriator.

A'SHES (S.) the duſt or powder of wood, coals, or other combuſtible matter, which remains after the primary body is conſumed by burning, or at leaſt diſſolved in its form by violently looſening the cohesion of the parts together. They are properly the earth, and fixed ſalts of the fuel, which the fire cannot raiſe, all the other principles being gone off in ſmoak; the chymiſts call them ealx. If well burnt they are generally very white, the oil that cauſes them to be black, being evaporated. The aſhes of kali, fern, &c. are principal ingredients in making glaſs, and teſts for refiners. It is confidently affirmed, that the aſhes of all vegetables contain ſome iron, which occaſioned a very ingenious diſpute, whether the metal exiſted in the plants, or was produced by calcination. Aſhes are abundantly uſeful in phyſick, bleaching, ſugar-works, &c. and particularly in agriculture, making an excellent manure for cold and wet grounds. The Jews made a lye, or luſtral water, with the aſhes of an heifer ſacrificed on the great day of expiation, the aſhes whereof were diſtributed to the people, and the water uſed in purifications, as often as any one touched a dead perſon, or was preſent at funerals, Numbers xix. 17.

ASHTA'ROTH, ASTA'ROTH, or ASTA'RTE (S.) a Philiſtine idol, which Samuel commanded the Jews to pull down; alſo the name of the Sidonians falſe deity, adored by Solomon, when he turned idolater. The word ſignifies a flock of ſheep and riches; for which reaſon ſome think, that it was the name of the king of Syria, ſo called upon account of his great wealth; by others it is ſuppoſed to be one of the four Venuſes. The ſcripture calls her Aſerah or Aſerim, the goddeſs of woods and groves, becauſe of her being worſhipped there, where the acts of uncleanneſs committed by her adorers, rendered her very infamous. She is ſometimes called the queen of heaven, and the worſhipping of her is called worſhipping the hoſt of heaven. She is generally joined with the god Baal, and called a god, the Hebrews having no word for goddeſs.

A'SH-WEDNESDAY (S.) the firſt day of Lent, when, in the primitive church, notorious ſinners were put to open penance; thus: They appeared at the church-door bare-foot and cloathed in ſack-cloth, where being examined, their diſcipline was proportioned according to their crimes; after which being brought into the church, the biſhop ſinging the ſeven penitential Pſalms, they proſtrated themſelves, and with tears begged abſolution; the whole congregation had aſhes on their heads, to ſignify, that they were both mortal, and deſerved to be burnt to aſhes for their ſins.

A'SIA (S.) one of the largeſt quarters of the world; ſo called by the Greeks, from the nymph Aſia, daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Japhet. This part of the world world was firſt peopled; here the law of God was firſt promulgated, and Chriſt appeared in the fleſh; here many of the greateſt monarchies of the world have had their riſe; from hence all arts and ſciences are derived, and moſt of the religions that have appeared in the world. It is bounded by the Tartarian ſea on the north, by the Chineſe ſea on the eaſt, by the Indian and Arabian ſeas on the ſouth, and on the weſt, the Red-ſea divides it from Africa. Its extent from eaſt to weſt is 1750 German leagues, and from north to ſouth 1550; it is under the dominion of the grand ſeignor, king of Perſia, great Mogul, emperor of China, and cham of Tartary. After the deluge, the empire of the Aſſyrians began here by Belus or Ninus, and continued to Sardanapalus; then it paſſed to the Medes by Arbaces to Aſtyages; to the Perſians, by Cyrus to Darius; to the Grecians and Macedonians, by Alexander the Great. The Parthians alſo eſtabliſhed a very powerful empire, which ended under Alexander Severus, and paſſed again to the Perſians, but it flouriſhed again about 1515. The air is very temperate, and if we conſider its gold, ſilver, rarities, fruit, corn, ſimples, drugs, &c. we may juſtly denominate it the pleaſanteſt and richeſt part of the whole world.

ASIA'TICKS (S.) thoſe people who live in, or inhabit Aſia.

ASI'DE (Part.) privately or concealed; ſo in a Play, one of the characters is ſaid to ſpeak aſide, to himſelf or privately, ſo that the other do not hear him; alſo when a man breaks, hides, or abſconds, he is ſaid to go aſide.

ASSASSINA'TION (S.) a private, treacherous, cowardly, barbarous murder.

ASSAU'LT (V.) to ſet upon a perſon violently and illegally; it is actionable and damage may be recovered for it; in War, it is much the ſame with ſtorming; for taking a town by aſſault, is taking it by ſtorm.

ASSA'Y (V.) to examine, prove, or try a matter very exactly; as, to eſſay ſilver or gold, is to melt a part of the whole maſs or ingot in a very ſtrong fire, which being weighed before it was put into the copple or melting pot, very exactly, and alſo after it comes out, the fineneſs of the whole is judged by this eſſay; for what is loſt by this part ſo tried, is proportioned to the whole, which is accordingly pronounced more or leſs fine, as it loſes more or leſs in the eſſay. The eſſay of weights and meaſures is an examination of them by a proper officer, called the clerk of the market, by weighing or meaſuring them with ſuch, as are very nicely adjuſted according to the cuſtom of the place, or ſtandard appointed by ſtatute. In Muſick, the flouriſh in the key, to try whether the inſtrument is in tune, and to put the hand in a proper poſition before the grand performance begins, is called an eſſay.

ASSE'MBLAGE (S.) a total, or collection of ſeveral things into one ſum or heap, a joining or uniting together.

ASSE'MBLE (V.) to gather, meet, or call together a number of perſons or things into one company, maſs, or heap.

ASSI'GN (V.) to make over, to transfer to another; to ſhew, ſet forth, or declare why a thing ſhould be done, is to aſſign or give reaſons; in a Law Senſe, it is the appointing one perſon to act or do a thing for and in the behalf of another.

ASSI'GNABLE (A.) any thing that may be made over, or conveyed by one perſon to another.

ASSIGNA'TION (S.) the aſſigning or making a thing over to another; but very commonly means an appointment to meet for love matters, or amorous intrigues.

ASSIGNEE' (S.) a perſon to whom any thing is made over, which may be either by deed, or by law; by deed, when the leſſee of a term ſells, or aſſigns by deed, his right or intereſt in an eſtate, &c. In Law, an executor is called the aſſignee of the deceaſed perſon; in caſes of Bankruptcy, aſſignees are perſons choſe from among the principal creditors of the bankrupt, to take care of his eſtate, effects, and debts, and to ſee them diſpoſed of to the beſt advantage, for the common intereſt of all the concerned.

ASSI'GNMENT (S.) a transferring or making over any thing that is the property of one perſon, to the uſe, benefit, and property of another.

ASSI'MULATE (V.) to imitate or copy after, to feign or counterfeit, to make one ſubſtance into another.

ASSIMULA'TION (S.) the making one thing like another; and Phyſically, means the changing the chyle into blood, or the nutritious juices into the ſubſtance of the body.

ASSI'SE or ASSI'ZE (S.) the ſitting of judges or juſtices to determine cauſes; formerly it was the extraordinary ſittings of ſuperior judges in inferior courts, to inquire whether the inferior judges did their duty, as to hear appeals; alſo a court held occaſionally in the king's palace; alſo a writ directed to the ſheriff, for the recovery of the poſſeſſion of things immoveable, whereof a man or his anceſtors have been diſſeized; it has been ſometimes uſed for a jury. Aſſizes are general or ſpecial; general, when the judges go their circuits; ſpecial, when a commiſſion is granted to take cognizance of one or two particular cauſes.

ASSI'ST (V.) to help, aid, encourage, or be preſent at the doing a thing.

ASSI'STANCE (S.) help, aid, encouragement, ſuccour.

ASSI'STANT (S.) one who helps, aids, aſſiſts, encourages, or any ways forwards the doing of a thing; in Civil Affairs, particularly in the management of publick companies, there are commonly a governor, ſub or deputy deputy governor, and more or leſs aſſiſtants, according to the charter of the company, who ordinarily have the whole power of managing all affairs belonging to the common concerns of the company, but are for the moſt part obliged to lay all extraordinary matters before a general collection of the proprietors, commonly call'd a general court, for their conſent and approbation.

ASSO'CIATE (V.) to enter into a league or contract with one or more perſons, to ſolicit or carry on a concern for their common benefit.

ASSO'CIATE (S.) a companion, or intimate friend or acquaintance.

ASSOCIA'TION (S.) the entering into partnerſhip, or agreement with others to do ſomething; in Law, it is a patent ſent by the king to the juſtices of aſſize, to add other perſons to them, for the more effectual taking the aſſize; in Logick, it is when two or more ideas conſtantly follow one another in the mind, ſo that the others always ariſe when the firſt is preſent.

ASSU'ME (V.) to take upon one's ſelf, to arrogate.

ASSU'MPSIT (S.) a promiſe to do or pay a thing to or for another voluntarily.

ASSU'MPTION (S.) in Logick, is the minor or ſecond propoſition in a categorical ſyllogiſm; alſo a conſequence drawn from the propoſitions of which an argument is compoſed; alſo a feſtival or ſolemnity obſerved by the church of Rome, in honour of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, who, as they ſuppoſe, was taken up, ſoul and body, into heaven.

ASSU'MPTIVE (A.) any thing that may be lawfully taken, and uſed by one who before did it not; ſo in Heraldry, aſſumptive arms are ſuch as a perſon has a title to bear, by virtue of ſome action done or performed by him, which by birth he could not wear; as, if a perſon that has naturally no coat, ſhould in lawful war take a prince or nobleman priſoner, he has from that time a right to bear the arms of ſuch priſoner, by virtue of that military law, That the dominion of things taken in lawful war paſſes to the conqueror.

ASSU'RANCE (S.) a ſecurity, poſitive promiſe, certainty, confidence.

ASSU'RE (V.) to aſſert, to promiſe poſitively; alſo to inſure, or undertake for the ſafe delivery of a thing.

ASSWA'GE (V.) to pacify, abate, allay, or appeaſe, to perſuade, or bring into temper.

A'STERISK or A'STERISM (S.) a mark like a ſtar, importing either ſome deficiency in words or letters, or ſomething remarkable referred to; in Aſtronomy, a conſtellation of fixed ſtars ſo called.

A'STHMA (S.) a diſtemper that renders breathing very difficult, by reaſon of a diſorder in the lungs.

ASTHMA'TICK (A.) one who is ſhort-breathed.

ASTO'NISH (V.) to amaze, ſurprize, or confound.

ASTO'NISHMENT (S.) an extraordinary ſurprize, great admiration or amazement.

A'STRAGAL (S.) in Architecture, a ſmall round member on the top or bottom of a column; it is ſometimes uſed to ſeparate the faſcia of the architrave, in which caſe it is wrought in chaplets or beads; it is alſo placed above and below the liſts immediately adjoining to the dye of the pedeſtal. In Gunnery, it is a ring or moulding on a piece of ordnance, at about half a foot diſtance from the mouth.

ASTRA'Y (V.) to wander out of the right way, to go in a wrong path.

ASTRE'A (S.) according to the poetical account, was the daughter of Jupiter and Themis, and goddeſs of juſtice; ſhe came from heaven, in the golden age, to live upon earth; but the wickedneſs of the iron age was ſuch, that ſhe fled to heaven again, and was placed in the Zodiack.

ASTRI'DE or ASTRA'DDLE (Part.) the ſitting upon any thing with one leg on the one ſide, and the other leg on the other ſide, as a man on horſeback, &c.

ASTRI'NGE (V.) to bind up, to make faſt, to ſtop the flowing of blood or humours by proper medicines.

ASTRI'NGENT (A.) binding or tying up; ſo in Phyſick, thoſe medicines that create coſtiveneſs are called aſtringents.

A'STROLABE (S.) an inſtrument to take the altitude or height of the ſun or ſtars.

ASTRO'LOGER (S.) one who pretends by his ſkill in the ſtarry world, to predict what is to come, or to tell what is paſt, relating to the ſafety or welfare both of kingdoms and private perſons.

ASTROLO'GICAL (A.) ſomething belonging or relating to the art of aſtrology.

ASTRO'LOGY (S.) an art, taking its riſe from aſtronomy, which pretends by obſerving the aſpects of the planets, and by knowing their influences, to foretel what is to come, or relate what is paſt: This art was very much ſtudied by the ancient mathematicians, who, it is pretended, found out what no body now knows, the principal ſecrets being loſt, although the modern impoſtors affirm, each for himſelf, to have found, excluſive of all others.

ASTRO'NOMER (S.) one ſkilled in the ſcience of aſtronomy.

ASTRONO'MICAL (A.) any thing relating, belonging or pertaining to aſtronomy, whether it be tables, inſtruments, &c.

ASTRO'NOMY (S.) a ſcience that teaches the motions, diſtances, magnitudes, periods and eclipſes of the heavenly bodies; it is very antient, being known to the Chaldeans near 2000 years before Alexander took Babylon; the clearneſs of their hemiſphere inviting them to make celeſtial obſervations, continual practice improv'd it. From them it was communicated to the Egyptians, among whom an academy was erected by Ptolemy Philadelphus, for the ſtudy and improvement of it, in which Hipparchus made great progreſs, by diſcoveries and obſervations, and predicted eclipſes for many axes after. From thence it travelled into Greece. The Saracens brought a little of it out of Egypt, upon their conqueſt there in the 8th century, from whom it came into Europe, and about the middle of the 13th century, Alphonſus king of Caſtile ſpent 400,000 crowns in compoſing more correct tables than had been before known, which are ſtill extant, and well known by the name of the Alphonſine Tables. About the beginning of the 16th century, Copernicus revived the old exploded doctrine of the ſun's being the center of the ſyſtem, and the earth a planet moving round him. Kepler and ſeveral other great men followed him, and made great diſcoveries, particularly Galileo, by the help of perſpective glaſſes, which have been improved into teleſcopes of various ſorts, upon which many of the new diſcoveries depend, and although Sir Iſaac Newton has done many wonders, there is ſtill room for future induſtry to compleat what is begun.

ASU'NDER (Part.) parted, or at a diſtance one from another, divided into two or more parts.

ASY'LUM (S.) a place of refuge for unfortunate perſons, who by accident, or unavoidable neceſſity, had done things that rendered them obnoxious to the law; God commanded the Jews to build certain cities for this purpoſe. The poſterity of Hercules is ſaid to have built one at Athens, to protect themſelves againſt ſuch as their father had irritated. Cadmus built one at Thebes, and Romulus one on mount Palatine. A while after Chriſtianity's coming into England, ſuperſtitious veneration ran ſo high, that churches, monaſteries, church-yards and biſhops houſes became aſylums to all that fled to them, let the crime be what it would; of which very ill uſe was made, both by the clergy and laity. Something of this nature is ſtill practiſed in popiſh countries, but not to ſo great an extravagance as it was here.

ASY'MMETRAL (A.) incommenſurable, or that have no other meaſure that can divide or meaſure any number of quantities, without ſome deficiency, or redundancy.

ASYMPTO'TES (S.) certain lines in that part of mathematicks called the conick ſections, that continually approach nearer and nearer to each other, yet can never meet, though continued infinitely.

AT (Part.) now in the place, come to, or arrived; as, He is at home, or he is now in the houſe, or part adjacent; I am at my journey's end, or am come to the place intended, &c.

ATCHIE'VE (V.) to perform or finiſh a thing, particularly ſomething great and noble.

ATCHIE'VEMENT (S.) the doing an honourable and worthy action. In Heraldry, it is the whole coat, embelliſhed with every thing that belongs to it.

A'THEISM (S.) the denying of a God, the diſbelieving a firſt, immaterial, and intelligent cauſe of all things.

A'THEIST (S.) one who pretends not only to diſbelieve a ſupreme Being or Cauſe of all things, but undertakes to demonſtrate the abſurdity and impoſſibility of ſuch a Being.

ATHEI'STICAL (A.) any thing belonging to, or tending to atheiſm.

A'THERSTON (S.) a pretty good market-town in Warwickſhire, diſtant from London 84 computed miles. The market is weekly on Tueſday.

ATHLE'TICK (A.) belonging to wreſtling, robuſt, ſtrong, and hardy, fit for ſuch ſturdy exerciſes.

ATLA'NTES (S.) thoſe figures which in ſome old buildings are made in the forms of men or beaſts, ſupporting the edifice; they are ſometimes called caryatides.

A'TLAS (S.) the name of a king of Mauritania, celebrated for his ſkill in aſtronomy. The invention of the inſtrument called the ſphere, is attributed to him; upon which the poets improved, and fabulouſly attributed the carrying the world upon his ſhoulders to him. There is a mountain in Africa called by this name, into which he is ſaid to be metamorphoſed, upon account of its great height, appearing to the vulgar to ſupport the heavens. Alſo books, or collections of maps, general and particular, for the whole world, are called atlaſſes. In Anatomy, the firſt vertebra of the neck goes by this name; and in Architecture, thoſe figures of half men, uſed in ſome old buildings, by way of ornament to the ſupports of houſes, are called atlaſſes.

A'TMOSPHERE (S.) the large hemiſphere that viſibly ſurrounds us, containing the air, clouds, rain, &c. Its height is very variouſly conjectured, grounded upon different phænomena, and ſundry experiments; but the moſt general received opinion is, that it is about 45 miles. The weight, denſity, thickneſs, rarity, &c. are propoſitions that have, and do whet the wits of the naturaliſts of all ages and nations, and in all probability will continue ſo to do. All bodies are ſuppoſed to have their particular atmoſphere, whether terreſtrial or celeſtial; in the terreſtrial, they are formed by certain emiſſions of effluvia from the bodies themſelves, to a certain diſtance.

A'TOM (S.) the ſmalleſt particles, bits, or pieces of matter, that any body is ſuppoſed to be made up of. From whence the doctrine that undertakes to account for the origin, or formation of things, upon the ſuppoſition of gravity and motion, is ſometimes called the atomical and ſometimes the corpuſcular philoſophy, and is now generally received throughout Europe.

ATO'NE (V.) to ſatisfy, appeaſe, or pay for an injury done, or a crime committed, whereby the offender is reſtored to favour.

ATO'NEMENT (S.) reconciliation, appeaſing of anger, ſatisfying or paying a debt.

ATRO'CIOUS (A.) notorious, heinous, cruel, outrageous, barbarous.

A'TROPHY (S.) a decaying, or conſumption, occaſioned by the food's not becoming nutritive, but either ſome part or limb waſtes away, or the whole body continually decays.

A'TROPOS (S.) in the heathen Mythology, is one of the three fatal ſiſters, that cuts off or puts a period to the life of man.

ATTA'CH (V.) to arreſt, ſeize, or apprehend by virtue of a writ; alſo to bring over, tie, and unite a perſon to the intereſt of another.

ATTA'CHMENT (S.) in Law, is the taking, ſecuring, or detaining a perſon or thing by virtue of a writ; it differs from an arreſt, becauſe that iſſues out of the inferior courts by precept, this out of the ſuperior courts by precept or writ: An arreſt is only upon the body of a man, but this is more general and extends to goods likewiſe. Alſo the love, intereſt, reaſon, or cauſe of a perſon's being zealous for another's welfare or promotion.

ATTA'CK (S.) the act of ſetting upon or aſſaulting a perſon or thing; the beginning of a quarrel or diſpute; in the military Art, it is the endeavour to force a paſs, poſt, or body of troops; in Fortification, it is an endeavour of the beſiegers, by trenches, mines, galleries, &c. to make themſelves maſters of the fortreſs. So a pretended aſſault at one or more places, to make the beſieged divide themſelves into ſeveral parties, in order to hide the grand attack or deſign, is called a falſe attack; and to charge both ſides of the baſtion, is called an attack in flank.

ATTA'CK (V.) to ſet upon, aſſault, quarrel, fight, or diſpute with a perſon, or number of perſons.

ATTA'IN (V.) to acquire, get, arrive at, compaſs, or bring about.

ATTAI'NABLE (A.) whatever may be acquired, got, compaſſed, or brought to paſs.

ATTAI'NDER (S.) in Law, is when a perſon has committed felony or treaſon, and judgment is paſſed upon him: The children of an attainted perſon cannot be heirs to him, or any other anceſtor; and if he were noble before, his poſterity is hereby degraded; nor can this corruption of blood be taken away, but by an act of parliament, or reverſing the judgment by a writ of error. Attainder is more extenſive than conviction, becauſe it does not commence before judgment. A man is attainted either by appearance or proceſs.

ATTAI'NMENTS (S.) whatever a perſon has obtained, or made himſelf maſter of, by induſtry and careful application, whether the goods of fortune, or the embelliſhments of learning.

ATTAI'NT (V.) to ſpoil, diſhonour, corrupt, or defile.

ATTAI'NT (S.) in Law, is a writ which lies after judgment againſt a jury, for giving a falſe verdict in any court of record, whether the action was real or perſonal, if the debt or damages exceeded forty ſhillings; in ſuch caſe the judgment was, anciently, that the jurors meadows ſhould be ploughed up, their houſes thrown down, their woods grubbed up, and their lands and tenements forfeited to the king; but if the perſon that brought the attaint be caſt, he ſhall be impriſoned, and ranſomed at the king's pleaſure. In the Farriers Language, a hurt in a horſe's leg, proceeding from the kick of another horſe, or from ſtriking his own forelegs againſt the hinder ones, occaſioned by an over-reach in froſty weather, is ſo called; the uſual place is in the heel or truſh.

ATTE'MPER or ATTE'MPERATE (V.) to qualify, prepare, or make ready, particularly ſpoken of metals and medicines.

ATTE'MPT (V.) to ſtrive, try, or endeavour at a thing.

ATTE'MPT (S.) a trial, or endeavour to do a thing.

ATTE'ND (V.) to wait upon, to hearken, or give ear to, to apply or bend one's mind to a thing.

ATTE'NDANCE (S.) waiting, ſervice; alſo a company of ſervants, or the retinue of a nobleman.

ATTE'NDANT (S.) one who waits upon another.

ATTE'NTION (S.) hearkning, diligent application, ſtudy, or obſervation.

ATTE'NTIVE (A.) heedful, obſerving, diligent, careful, induſtrious.

ATTE'NUATE (V.) to thin, weaken, or make leſs; ſo attenuating medicines are ſuch as by their conſtitution, thin and diſperſe thoſe viſcous humours, which by reaſon of their glutinouſneſs could not paſs thro' the pores of the ſkin.

ATTENUA'TION (S.) a thinning any thing, or making it more fluid than it was before.

ATTENUA'TIVE (A.) any thing that may be thinned or made more fluid.

ATTE'ST (V.) to witneſs, vouch, or certify in writing to the truth of a thing.

ATTESTA'TION (S.) the witneſſing or affirming to a thing in writing.

A'TTIC (A.) ſomething relating to the city, manner, cuſtoms, &c. of Attica or Athens; and in Philology, we ſay attic ſalt, for a delicate, poignant kind of wit and humour after the Athenian manner, who were particular in this way; ſo attic witneſs means one that cannot be corrupted. In Architecture, an attic building is where no roof or covering is to be ſeen; and an attic order is a ſmall one, placed as a crowning, compleating, or finiſhing a large one: The attic baſe is what was peculiarly appropriated by the ancients to the

Ionick

Ionick order, by Palladio and ſome other moderns, in the Dorick, and by others eſpecially the moderns, as Sir Chriſtopher Wren, in St. Paul's church in London, &c. in all the orders indifferently, eſpecially in large columns that ſupport the porticoes, &c.

A'TTICISM (S.) a ſhort, pithy, conciſe manner of ſpeaking or writing, ſometimes called Laconick.

ATTIRE (V.) to dreſs, cloath, or put on what is neceſſary for defence againſt the weather, or for ornament.

ATTI'RE (S.) cloaths, dreſs, garments, or furniture; in Heraldry, the horns of a ſtag or buck is called their attire.

A'TTITUDE (S.) the poſture that a picture or ſtatue ought to ſtand in, and by which the ſuppoſed paſſions of the mind may appear to the beholder.

A'TTLEBOROUGH (S.) in Norfolk, diſtant from London 80 computed and about 94 meaſured miles, was anciently a noted city; but is now only a conſiderable town, whoſe market is on Thurſday every fortnight, for fat bullocks, ſheep, &c. The moſt remarkable things in or near it are the great hall and meer.

ATTO'RNEY or ATTU'RNEY (S.) in Law, a perſon appointed or deputed by another to act for, and in the ſtead of himſelf, and particularly to ſolicit, or carry on a law ſuit; in the Civil Law, they are called proctors; they are either general or ſpecial; the attorney general is he that is appointed to manage all ſuits for the crown, whether criminal or otherwiſe, eſpecially treaſon, and to him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. He pleads within the bar in all courts; but when a privy counſellor he cannot plead, but on the king's affairs, without obtaining the privy ſeal for ſo doing; a ſpecial attorney is one who is appointed to one or more cauſes particularly ſpecified.

ATTO'RNMENT (S.) in Law, a transferring the duty or ſervice owing to one lord to another, or the acknowledgment, homage, or ſervice, that a tenant makes to a new lord; and this is either by word or act, voluntary or compulſory, and may be made either to the lord himſelf, or to his ſteward in court.

ATTRA'CT (V.) to draw to, to entice, allure, or win upon a perſon.

ATTRA'CTION (S.) in natural Philoſophy, is that power or property whereby one body or thing acts upon another of a different ſort, and by ſuch acting brings or draws the body acted upon nearer to itſelf; this is ſometimes called ſuction, and ſometimes gravitation; and ſo in the Newtonian Philoſophy, it is that power or principle whereby all bodies mutually tend to each other.

ATTRA'CTIVE (A.) whatever has the faculty or power of attraction.

ATTRA'HENTS (S.) medicines or remedies that operate upon the internal diſorder, that a perſon is afflicted with, by being externally applied, and thereby mixing with, and rarifying any obſtructed matter, make it fit for diſcharge, upon laying the part open by cauſtick or inciſion. They are alſo called drawers, ripeners, digeſtives, &c.

ATTRIBUTE (V.) to aſcribe the doing of a thing to one's ſelf or another.

A'TTRIBUTE (S.) a property belonging, or that is peculiar to a perſon or thing, by which he is capable of doing certain acts; or more extenſively, is common to all things of a like kind, but different in quantity or extent; as, to know or think is common to God and man, but differs in extent, his property being to know all things and perfectly, ours to know few things and imperfectly. In Divinity, this Word is generally uſed in a reſtrained ſenſe, and applied to God only; under which is included all that we can imagine to go to make up a perfect being, ſuch as infinite wiſdom, goodneſs, juſtice, &c. The heathens appropriated a particular deity to each attribute; ſo they called his power by the name of Jupiter, his wiſdom Apollo, &c. In Painting and Statuary, ſome diſtinguiſhing addition to the principal figure is called an attribute; as the club to Hercules, the peacock to Juno, the eagle to Jupiter, &c.

ATTRI'TION (S.) the rubbing or fretting of one part or thing againſt another; with the Divines, the firſt degree of repentance or a ſlight tranſitory ſorrow for ſin in general, or a crime in particular is ſo called.

AVAI'L (V.) to profit, benefit, or advantage.

AVAI'LABLE (A.) profitable, beneficial, or advantageous.

AVA'NT or AVAU'NT (Part.) before, toward; ſometimes uſed by way of horror or ſcorn, for be gone, as Avant or Avaunt Satan! ſaid in a fright, upon meeting or ſeeing ſomething very diſagreeable or hideous.

A'XIS (S.) in Geometry, Aſtronomy, &c. is an imaginary line paſſing through the center of any figure, or orbit, &c. about which the revolution is performed.

AXMI'NSTER (S.) an ancient town on the river Ex, in the extream borders of Devonſhire, famous for the tombs of the Saxon princes, that were ſlain by the Danes in the bloody battle of Brunaburg. It hath a large market weekly on Saturdays; diſtant from London 121 computed miles.

AYDE or AIDE (S.) a tax paid by the vaſſal, to the chief lord, upon ſome urgent occaſion, either aſcertained by cuſtom, or ſpecified at the grant of lands. Among the French and Engliſh there was an aide due for knighting the king's eldeſt ſon, which was demanded by Philip the Fair in 1313. This aide being due upon the birth of the prince, for the eaſe of the ſubject, it was ordain'd by the ſtatute of Weſtminſter, in the reign of Edward I. that it ſhould not be levied till he was 15 years old; there was likewiſe an aide for marrying the king's eldeſt daughter practiſed in England, Normandy, and elſewhere; but by the above ſtatute, it could not be demanded till ſhe was ſeven years old. In Feudal Tenures, there was an aide for ranſoming the chief lord, if he ſhould happen to be taken priſoner; ſo when king Richard I. was taken priſoner, as he travelled incognito thro' Germany, by the emperor Henry IV. an aide of twenty ſhillings upon every knight's fee in England, was levied to redeem him; this was ſometimes extended to redeem the chief lord's wife, or eldeſt ſon; there was alſo an aide due for building and fortifying caſtles, and ſeveral other occaſions. The word in general ſignifies any help or aſſiſtance of any ſort or kind, or for any occaſion whatever.

A'ZYMUS (A.) unleavened, or unfermented. The Greek and Romiſh church have had long diſputes whether tht Euchariſtical bread ſhould be leavened or unleavened, but as the whole diſpute rather tends to deſtroy, than promote religion, I ſhall ſay nothing of it here; the Jews in their principal feaſt, the Paſſover, uſed unleavened bread for ſeven days, in commemoration of the haſty departure of their fore-fathers out of Egypt. They began to cleanſe their houſes of every thing leavened the 13th of the month Niſan, which they very religiouſly obſerve at this day; and that they may ſtrictly come up to their traditions, they ſearch every part of their houſes, to ſee if any bread, &c. leavened, remains unuſed; then they thoroughly cleanſe them, and furniſh their kitchen with new veſſels, or cauſe them that they have to be new tinned, cleanſed, &c. againſt the 14th day of the month Niſan.

B.

B Is the ſecond letter of moſt alphabets, and in our tongue, is the firſt conſonant and mute, and in its formation reſembles a ſheep bleating; for which reaſon the Egyptians repreſent it by that creature, in their hieroglyphicks; the Eaſtern Grammarians call it a labial letter, upon account of uſing the lips moſt in its formation; it is ſometimes turned into P and V; it ſo cloſes up the lips, that a vowel either really or imaginarily always follows it to open them, as may eaſily be tried. Among the ancient Latins it ſtood for 300, and when marked thus, B, for 3000, and when it had an accent below it, for 200; but with the Greeks and Hebrews it ſtood for two; it is now often uſed contractedly for words, as B. A. for bachelor of arts; B. L. bachelor of Laws, &c. In Muſick Books, B ſignifies the baſs, or baſſo continuo.

BAIL (V.) to free or ſet at liberty a perſon that is under an arreſt or in priſon, whether the cauſe be for debt or criminal, by becoming ſurety for the appearance of the party at a day and a place appointed.

BAIL (S.) the ſurety or perſon that is bound for the appearance of another, to anſwer certain matters in a court of judicature; alſo the limit or boundary of ſuch a part or portion of a large park, that is put under the care of ſeveral keepers or foreſters, as is the charge of one; alſo the iron handle of a pail or other veſſel, that is lifted from one place to another with water or other liquors, in the ſhape of half a hoop or circle.

BAI'LABLE (A.) any cauſe or action for which the law allows a perſon his liberty, by giving ſureties to anſwer the matter by appearing at a time and place aſſigned.

BAI'LIFF or BAI'LY (S.) the name of an officer, brought hither by the Normans, being honourable among the French, as one to whom the care and charge of affairs was committed. Provincial bailiffs, in France, have the chief adminiſtration of juſtice in counties; and in Scotland, it is the name of a judge; but now in England, both the name and office is grown into ſuch a contempt, that the word commonly means no more more than a bare meſſenger, appointed by the ſheriff to go up and down the country to ſerve writs, ſummon county courts, ſeſſions, aſſizes, &c. There are ſtill ſome places where the chief magiſtrate is called bailiff; as the high bailiff of Weſtminſter, &c. ſometimes it means a gentleman's ſteward or rent-gatherer.

BAI'LIWICK (S.) a certain portion or diſtrict of land, that is under the care or juriſdiction of a bailiff.

BAI'RAM (S.) a feaſt celebrated by the Turks after the faſt of Ramazan. It is kept twice a year, viz. once immediately after the Ramazan, called the grand bairam, and again ſeventy days after, called the little bairam; it holds three days, during which no work is done, but preſents are made to one another with the utmoſt expreſſions of joy; if the day after Ramazan prove ſo cloudy, as to hide the new moon, it is put off to the day following, when it begins, tho' the obſcurity continue. At the celebration of this feaſt, after uſing many odd mimickries in their moſques, they cloſe it with a ſolemn prayer againſt the infidels, to root out chriſtian princes, or to embroil them againſt one another, that by their diſſenſions they may enlarge their dominions.

BAIT (V.) to refreſh one's ſelf in travelling, by ſtopping to eat, drink, or ſleep; alſo to worry or teaze a perſon, by continually aſking for what he refuſes to grant; alſo to put or lay a ſnare or temptation in a perſon's way, to catch him by ſurprize, or to bribe him into one's intereſt.

BAIT (S.) any thing that is a lure or enticement to a perſon to do a thing, or catch him by ſurprize; in Falconry, when a hawk claps her wings, or ſtoops to take her prey; alſo in Fiſhing, the gentle or other decoy put on the hook to catch fiſh with, is ſo called.

BAIZE or BAYS (S.) a ſort of woollen manufacture made at Colcheſter, uſed for womens under-petticoats, or other ordinary uſes.

BAKE (V.) to dreſs victuals in an oven, a ſort of roaſting fleſh, but not ſo delicious as before an open fire; alſo the common method of preparing bread to eat, is after kneading to bake it in an oven.

BA'KEWELL (S.) one of the beſt market towns in the peak of Derbyſhire, ſeated among hills, on the banks of the Wye, diſtant from London 115 computed, and 142 meaſured miles; has a large market on Mondays for lead, the great manufacture of thoſe parts, and all ſorts of proviſions; it is an exceeding large pariſh, conſiſting of ſeven chapels, and is a peculiar, freed from all manner of epiſcopal juriſdiction.

BA'LA (S.) tho' but a mean ſmall market town in Merionethſhire in North Wales, yet is a corporation enjoying many immunities, governed by bailiffs; and has a tolerable market weekly on Saturdays; diſtant from London 145 computed, and 184 meaſured miles. This town is ſeated near Pimble-meer, or Bala-lake, about three miles long, thro' which the river Dee is ſaid to run, but not to mingle with its waters, which is thus proved, that altho' there are plenty of ſalmons in the Dee, there are none to be found in the Meer, and great plenty of the fiſh called gwyniaid, much like whitings, are found in the Meer, but none of them in the Dee.

BA'LANCE or BA'LLANCE (S.) when conſidered Mathematically, is one of the ſimple powers in that part called mechanicks, which treats of the equality or difference of weight in heavy bodies, and are ſometimes called ſcales, ſometimes ſteel-yards, and theſe are of many different forms. With the Aſtronomers, one of the 12 ſigns of the Zodiack, mark'd thus ♎, is ſo called; the ſun enters this ſign about the 12th of September at the autumnal equinox; the conſtellation conſiſts of 14 ſtars of ſeveral magnitudes; when repreſented on a globe or planiſphere, it is under the form of a pair of ſcales. In Phyſicks, the balance of the air is the weight thereof, whereby it preſſeth where it is leaſt reſiſted, till it becomes of equal weight in all its parts. The balance of a watch is much like the pendulum of a clock, which by its motion regulates the motions of all the other parts.

BA'LANCE (V.) to make one part of a matter or thing even or equal to another, by adding to or ſubſtracting from the deficient part; to conſider and weigh ſeriouſly every part of an affair, by taking in all the objections as well as the conveniencies. In Merchandize, it is to ſettle either a particular account of a perſon or commodity, or to ſettle the whole book or ſyſtem, in order to ſee whether every thing be regularly and truly poſted in the ledger, and from thence to know the profit and loſs upon each, or all the commodities a man deals in, and alſo to know what remains undiſpoſed of, which, when weighed, counted, or meaſured, will exactly correſpond with what appears upon the account, if no embezzlement, waſte, or loſs has been made. In Politicks, to keep a balance among the ſeveral powers is, by making ſuch alliances to ſtrengthen the weaker, or weaken the ſtronger, that they may not be in a capacity of over-running their neighbours. In Trade, to preſerve the balance is ſo to proportion the quantity and value of imports and exports, that the value of imports, may not exceed that of the exports; alſo ſo to look after our neighbours, as not to permit them to monopolize the conſiderable and neceſſary branches thereof.

BALBU'TIES (S.) ſtuttering or ſtammering in a perſon's ſpeech.

BALCO'NY (S.) a ſmall area before a window ſurrounded with iron or wooden rails, to prevent perſons from falling; without ſuch defence it is called a flat, the uſe whereof is to ſtand and view fights as they paſs along, or the country around, and to take the air without the trouble of walking abroad, or being incommoded with mixt company.

BA'NGOR (S.) by ſome called a city, and by others a town, a biſhop's ſee in Carnarvonſhire in North-Wales, was anciently ſo large, as to be called Bangor the Great, which was defended by a powerful caſtle, which has been long ſince levelled; it is lowly ſeated on the ſea-ſhore, its cathedral is very mean and old, and by the people is pretended to be the moſt ancient in Britain, and that St. Daniel, to whom it is dedicated, was its firſt biſhop in 512. It is obſerved, that very few late biſhops of this ſee die in it, they generally being tranſlated as ſoon as opportunity preſents; and while they remain biſhops of this place, by reaſon of its ſmall income, are commonly allowed to hold ſome other good benefice in commendam. The houſes are tolerable, and pretty well inhabited. It is governed by the biſhop's ſteward, who keeps court leets, and court barons for the biſhop; it has an indifferent market weekly on Wedneſdays; is diſtant from London 180 computed, and 236 meaſured miles.

BA'NIANS (S.) an idolatrous ſect among the Eaſt-Indians, who hold a metempſychoſis, and will not therefore kill, or in any wiſe prejudice any living thing, not even the moſt noxious inſect. They believe there is a God, who created heaven and earth, and yet worſhip the devil, becauſe they think he is capable of doing them miſchief; they wear their hair ſhort, but do not ſhave their head. They underſtand buſineſs very well, and trade in moſt things: They marry their children at ſeven years of age; they make the chief part of their religion conſiſt in purifying and waſhing themſelves. If they touch one another, they muſt waſh and purify themſelves before they eat, drink, or enter into their own houſes. They wear about their necks a ſtone called tambran, which is as big as an egg, and has a hole in the middle, thro' which are put three ſtrings; this ſtone, they ſay, repreſents their great God; for which reaſon, and their profeſſion upper and the lower, which are united by a large ſtone bridge of ſeven arches, which hath a gate, a gatehouſe, and ſome houſes on it. The ſituation is both pleaſant and healthful for dwelling, and commodious for trade, by the navigableneſs of the Severn, which runs through it. It conſiſts of ſeveral ſtreets well paved with pebbles: It is a very ancient corporation enjoying many great privileges, being free from paying pontage, toll and cuſtom, to any other towns, and receives from many. It is governed by two bailiffs, who are elected annually out of the 24 aldermen, together with a recorder, a town-clerk, and other inferior officers. The bailiffs, for the time being, are lords of the manor for the town and liberties. It ſends two members to parliament, who are choſe by the burgeſſes. Its market, which is very large, is weekly on Saturday. It hath four fairs annually, two whereof are very great and laſt three days each, to which perſons from all parts of the kingdom reſort to buy and ſell horſes, black cattle, ſheep, &c. and particularly large quantities of hops; almoſt all ſorts of manufactures are carried on here. It has two large pariſh-churches, but the ſettled income of the miniſters is but ſmall, the ancient revenues being wholly alienated by the ſtatutes of diſſolution. Here is a free-ſchool for the burgeſſes ſons, which alſo ſends and maintains 18 ſcholars at the univerſity of Oxford. It is diſtant from London 108 computed and 135 meaſured miles.

It is reckoned the third city in England. The river Avon runs through the middle of it, over which there is a very good bridge, conſiſting of four large arches, upon which is built a ſtreet, with two rows of houſes on each ſide, one like London-Bridge: There is likewiſe a draw-bridge over the river Frome, to let in ſhips, &c. The whole taken together is of a large extent, and circular form. Formerly, the whole was encompaſſed with a double wall, of which only ſome ruins now remain. It is a large, opulent corporation, that ſends two members to parliament; and is governed by a mayor, aldermen, two ſheriffs, a recorder, &c. It is now encompaſſed with one wall, in which are ſix gates. Its ſtreets are many, uniform and well built, and all kept very neat, and free from all ill ſcents; no carts are permitted to come into the city, but all their goods, &c. are brought upon ſledges. The middle of the city is built cloſe, with ſhops fully ſtock'd with all ſorts of merchandize; but the other parts are more ſpacious, and fine houſes, particularly the ſquare about the key. It is well furniſhed with all ſorts of proviſions, having a market weekly, both on Wedneſday and Saturday, and ſeveral yearly fairs. It has a very noble key along the river Frome; and although the generality of the inhabitants are ſaid to be of a ſordid, low way of thinking, having little politeneſs, yet on College-Green is a very handſome building, called the Aſſembly-Room, which is thought will help to poliſh the gayer part of them. The ſmallneſs of the Tolſey or Change occaſioned them to procure an act of parliament in 1723, for building another, which, after ſeveral years delay and interruption, was at length finiſhed, and is very commodious for merchants. The manufacture of glaſs bottles is ſo great, as to employ 15 large houſes in making them, which is occaſioned by the large export of wine, cyder, beer, &c. and particularly the hot-well water of St. Vincent, which among other excellent qualities is found to be a ſpecifick for the diabetes. There are 19 churches in it, though but 17 pariſhes; and beſides thoſe there are a large number of meeting-houſes for Quakers, Baptiſts, &c. CA'BAL or CA'BALA (S.) this word is uſed in various ſenſes: The Hebrew cabala ſignifies tradition, and the rabbins, who are called cabaliſts, ſtudy principally the combination of particular words, letters, and numbers, and by this means pretend to diſcover what is to come, and to ſee clearly into the ſenſe of many difficult paſſages in ſcripture: This knowledge depends merely upon tradition; for which reaſon it is called cabala. The cabaliſts have abundance of names, which they call ſacred; theſe they make uſe of in their invocation of ſpirits, and imagine they receive great lights form them: They tell us, that the ſecrets of the cabala were diſcovered to Moſes on mount Sinai, which have been handed down from father to ſon, without interruption, and without the uſe of letters; for they are ſtrictly prohibited to write them down.

There is alſo an artificial cabala, which is divided into three parts, viz. the Gematrie, the Notaricon, and the Temurah; the Gematrie conſiſts in taking the letters of an Hebrew word for numbers, and explaining it by the arithmetical value of the letters whereof it is compoſed, as for example, the letters in יבא שילה, Jabo Schiloh, Shilo ſhall come, make up the ſame number as משיח, Meſſiach, the Meſſiah, from whence they conclude, that Shiloh is the Meſſiah. The Notaricon conſiſts in making every particular letter ſtand for a whole word, or in taking the firſt letters of every word in a ſentence, and compoſing the word of them. The Temurah conſiſts in tranpoſing the letters of a word, as we do to make anagrams.

There is alſo an inferior ſort of cabala, ſo called by the Chriſtians, uſed by the pretenders to magick, who, under the notion of forming figures with ſtars, and taliſmans, and an irreligious and prophane abuſe of certain paſſages in ſcripture, pretend to hold correſpondence with aerial beings, from whom they receive information concerning their inquiries; it is alſo uſed for the ſecrets of the hermetick philoſophy, or ſearchers after the philoſopher's ſtone, and univerſally for any hidden and imaginary art.

CAERLI'ON (S.) in Monmouthſhire, an ancient and flouriſhing city of the Romans: Here the noble Arthur kept his court, and here was a famous college for 200 ſtudents in aſtronomy and other liberal arts. It is pretty large, and commodiouſly ſituated upon the Uſke, over which there is a large wooden bridge, though the houſes are generally built of ſtone; its market is weekly on Thurſday; diſtant from London 112 computed, and 141 meaſured miles.

CAERMA'RTHEN (S.) the county-town of Caermarthenſhire, pleaſantly ſeated on the Towye, which is navigable up to the town for ſhips of moderate burden, for which there is a good key: There is a good bridge over the river. The town is well built and populous, and daily increaſing, the air being healthful, and the country fertile: The people are the moſt polite of all Wales. Formerly the Chancery and Exchequer were kept here: Merlin the famous Britiſh prophet flouriſhed here in 480: It was here the Britons held their parliaments, or meeting of their wiſe men, for making laws, &c. The town was formerly walled about, of which only now remain the ruins: It is a corporation, governed by a mayor, two ſheriffs, elected out of 16 burgeſſes, or aldermen, all clothed in ſcarlet, &c. It elects one parliament man, keeps courts for the trial of cauſes, holds the aſſizes, and hath two markets weekly, viz. on Wedneſday and Saturday, which are very great for corn, cattle and all ſorts of proviſions; diſtant from London 157 computed, and 206 meaſured miles.

CAERMA'RTHENSHIRE (S.) in South-Wales, is generally of a fertile ſoil, both for tillage tillage and paſturage, being not ſo mountainous as the neighbouring counties, and is well watered by the rivers Towye, Tavy, Laugh, or Taaffe, which with others diſcharge themſelves into the ſea, furniſhing the inhabitants plentifully with fiſh and fowl; and in many parts are dug fine pit-coal. It is in the dioceſe of Bangor, and has 68 pariſh churches, and ſix market-towns, all havens; it ſends two members to parliament, viz. the county one, and the town one.

CAERNA'RVON (S.) in North-Wales, is the chief town of Caernarvonſhire, commodiouſly ſeated on the ſea ſhore, from whence it hath a beautiful proſpect into the iſle of Angleſea. Formerly the princes of Wales had their Exchequer and Chancery here: It is a place of great ſtrength, both by nature and art, being encompaſſed on all ſides (except towards the eaſt) with the ſea, and two rivers; and had a ſtrong caſtle, where, in one of the towers called the Eagle-Tower, Edward II. the firſt prince of Wales, was born. It is a place of but ſmall extent, having one pariſh church; but its houſes and ſtreets are well built and contrived, and alſo well inhabited: It enjoys ſeveral immunities, ſends a burgeſs to parliament, is governed by the conſtable of the caſtle, who is always the mayor, who hath for his aſſiſtance an alderman, two bailiffs, a town-clerk and ſub-officers; its market is weekly on Saturdays, which is well ſupplied with corn and all ſorts of proviſion.

CAERNA'RVONSHIRE (S.) in North-Wales, formerly bore the name of Snowden-Foreſt, from the principal hill there ſeated, which is of a very great height and extent, on the top whereof floateth a meer, which formeth a river that falls into the ſea at Trathe-Mawer, and altho' it is very mountainous, and of a ſharp air, yet it is tolerably fruitful, and feeds large herds of cattle. In this county are 68 pariſh-churches, and 6 market-towns, all which are havens; it is in the dioceſe of Bangor, and ſends two members to parliament, viz. one for the county, and one for the chief town, called Caernarvon.

CALNE (S.) in Wiltſhire, which though but a ſmall town, ſituated in a ſtony ſoil, yet is endowed endowed with large privileges, both anciently and now. It was formerly one of the palaces of the Weſt-Saxon kings: It now ſends two burgeſſes to parliament, hath a market weekly on Tueſday, and a fair annually on the 25th of April. It hath a very neat church, and many poor. In 1725, ſo violent a ſtorm of rain fell in this town, that the waters roſe ſo ſuddenly, that a great quantity of goods were ſpoiled and loſt, and particularly a caſk of oil of 110 gallons was borne down by the ſtream, and two men were drowned in the ſtreets, in the ſight of their neighbours, who durſt not ſtir to their relief; diſtant from London 72 computed, and 87 meaſured miles.

CA'LTROP (S.) an inſtrument with four points, diſpoſed triangularly in ſuch a manner, that three of them bear upon the earth, the other being in the air; it is uſed in War, ſeveral of them being placed in the ground where the cavalry is to paſs, in order to embarraſs them.

CA'LVINISM (S.) the doctrine of Calvin and his followers, who maintained that predeſtination and reprobation are prior to the preſcience of good or evil works, and depend merely upon the will of God, without any regard to the merit of mankind; that God gives to thoſe whom he has predeſtinated, a faith which they cannot loſe, a neceſſitating grace which deſtroys the freedom of the will, and that he imputes no ſin to them: That the righteous can do no good work, by reaſon of original ſin, which cleaves to them, and that men are juſtified by faith. The modern Calviniſts either reject or palliate ſome of theſe articles.

CALVINI'STICAL (A.) like to, of, or belonging to the tenets and opinions of the Calviniſts.

CA'LVINISTS (S.) the embracers, followers, and maintainers of the doctrines and opinions of Calvin.

CA'MBRICK (S.) a very fine linen made at Cambray, a town in Flanders, from whence it is named.

CA'MBRIDGE (S.) the chief town of Cambridgeſhire; on the weſt ſide of it the Cam forms ſeveral little iſlands, and turning eaſtwards, divides it into two parts, which are joined together by a large ſtone bridge. It is now ſo large a town as to have 14 pariſh churches, beſides 12 colleges and 4 halls; a little beyond the bridge is ſome of the remains of an old ſtrong caſtle, eſpecially the Gate-houſe, which ſerves for the county goal. It is a town of very ancient ſtanding, being frequently mentioned in the earlieſt accounts of the oldeſt Britiſh hiſtories: It ſuffered much by the Danes; Roger de Montgomery deſtroyed it with fire and ſword to be revenged of king William Rufus; ſo that the univerſity was wholly abandoned: But king Henry I. to repair theſe damages beſtowed many privileges upon it, viz. to be free from the power of the ſheriff, and making it a corporation upon the payment of 100 marks yearly into the Exchequer, which ſum the ſheriff paid before for the profits ariſing from the town. The ferry over the river was now fixed here, which was left before at large, and King Henry III. added, that the merchants of the Guild in Cambridge ſhould be free from all toll, paſſage, leſtage, pontage and ſtallage, in all fairs in his dominions. In Wat Tyler's and Jack Straw's Rebellion, in the reign of Richard II. the rebels entered the town, ſeized the univerſity records, and burnt them in the market-place. It is a borough, governed by a mayor, high ſteward, recorder, and aldermen; but the mayor, at the entrance upon his office, is obliged to ſwear he will maintain the privileges, cuſtoms, and liberties of the univerſity. It has a great market weekly on Saturday, and a fair annually on the 15th of Auguſt; it ſends two members to parliament, and is diſtant from London 44 computed, and 52 meaſured miles.—The univerſity, though old, is not of ſo long ſtanding as the town, the earlieſt charters under king Lucius bearing date anno 531, being the ſooneſt as are pretended to, and theſe ſuſpected not to be authentick; as the ſeveral inns, colleges, halls, &c. were the works of ſundry ages, and the donations of many princes and noblemen, ſo were alſo the privileges belonging to them the work of many ages; for the particulars whereof, I refer to the writers upon theſe ſubjects.

CA'MBRIDGESHIRE (S.) is bounded on the north by Lincolnſhire, on the eaſt by Norfolk and Suffolk, on the ſouth by Eſſex and Hertfordſhire, and on the weſt by Huntingdon and Bedfordſhire; is in length but 35 miles, in breadth about 20, and in circuit about 130, containing 17 hundreds, 163 pariſhes, 9 market towns, 1 univerſity, 6 rivers, 7 bridges, 5 parks, 570,000 acres of land, and about 17,400 houſes; ſends ſix members to parliament, viz. 2 for the county, 2 for the univerſity, and 2 for the town of Cambridge; it in the dioceſe of Ely, and divided into two parts, viz. the ſouthern, which is a champain open country, that bears excellent corn and barley, of which latter is made abundance of malt; in this county alſo is gathered a great deal of ſaffron, the deareſt commodity produced in England; the northern part, called the iſle of Ely, is fenny, and neither ſo pleaſant or wholſome as the ſouthern part, yet has rich paſtures, which feed abundance of cattle, which are very profitable to the inhabitants, and afford great plenty of fiſh and fowl.

CA'MEL (S.) an animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries, ranked by Moſes among thoſe that were unclean; ſome are large and fleſhy, and fit only to carry burdens, which it is ſaid they will do to the amount of half a ton; others have two bunches on their backs like a ſaddle, and are fit for men to ride on, or carry burdens; a third ſort are both leſs and lean, called dromedaries, and uſed by the great men, as horſes, to ride on; the Arabians, Perſians, &c. eat their fleſh; it is ſaid they can travel a fortnight without food. As ſoon as one is colted, they tie his four feet under his belly put a carpet on his back, and ſtones upon the borders of it, that he may not be able to riſe for twenty days, to render his joints flexible, and eaſy to bend; he has a large ſolid foot, but not a hard one; in the ſpring all his hair falls off, and his ſkin remains quite naked, during which time the flies torment him, to remedy which, they belabour his body, they dreſs him with a ſwitch inſtead of a curry-comb, and duſt his hide as we do a carpet. Upon a journey they follow him whiſtling and ſinging, to make him go freely.—Calmet.

CAME'LEON (S.) an unclean animal, forbidden to be eaten by Moſes; it is a ſmall creature like a lizard, but with a larger and longer head; it has four feet, on each of which there are three claws, and a long flat tail, its noſe long, ending in an obtuſe point, its back ſharp, ſkin plaited and jagged like a ſaw from the neck to the laſt joint of the tail, with a tuft or comb on its head; in other reſpects like a fiſh. The report of its living upon air is a miſtake, flies and other ſmall inſects being its food; as to its colour, it is ſo framed, as to excite different colours in us, according as the rays of light fall upon it, or its ſituation is in reſpect to us, like the feathers of doves.

CHE'SHIRE (S.) upon William the Conqueror's ſettlement in England, he gave this province to Gerbord, a nobleman of Flanders, who had undergone many hardſhips for him; but he had only the title of an officiary earl, the grandeur of the title being not yet ſettled. A while after he made Hugh Lupus earl, with as ample a power in this county, as the king in his realm, ſubject to the king only: By virtue of this grant, Cheſhire had all ſovereign juriſdiction in its own precincts, and that in ſo high a degree, that the ancient earls had parliaments, conſiſting of their own barons and tenants, and were not obliged by the acts of the Engliſh parliaments, but held courts for judicially determining all pleas of lands, tenements, contracts, felonies, &c. and this power was lodged in theſe earls on purpoſe to encourage them to keep the Welch in awe; but by degrees it came to be a nuſance to the nation, inſtead of a benefit; and therefore this, and all other palatinates, was made ſubject to the crown by king Henry VIII. but this county ſtill retains the power of determining all pleas of lands and tenements, contracts and crimes, except treaſon. It is bounded on the north by Lancaſhire, from which the river Merſey parts it; on the north-eaſt corner it touches upon Yorkſhire; on the eaſt is Derbyſhire; and on the ſouth-eaſt Staffordſhire, from which it is divided in ſome places by hills and mountains, and in others by brooks and rivers; on the ſouth it hath Shropſhire and part of Flintſhire; and on the weſt Denbighſhire, and the reſt of Flintſhire; on the north-weſt corner it hath the Iriſh ocean, which receives all the rivers. It is 45 miles in length, 25 in breadth, and about 112 in circumference. It is divided into 7 hundreds, 11 market-towns, beſides Cheſter, and 125 pariſhes and villages, of which only 87 have churches; the reſt are chapelries; it ſends four members to parliament, two for the county, and two for the city of Cheſter; is computed to have 24,000 houſes, and 125,000 inhabitants; the ſoil is rich and fertile, both for tillage and paſturage, feeding abundance of cattle, affording plenty of corn, fiſh, (eſpecially ſalmon) fowl, butter, cheeſe and ſalt, which laſt is the ſtaple commodity of this county; beſides which are many quarries, affording ſlate and broad ſtone fit for buildings; alſo mill-ſtones out of Moucop-Hill; it is likewiſe well-furniſhed with timber and fuel from its woods, and the foreſts of Delamer and Maxfield; is plentifully watered with rivers, meers, and pools, and hath ſeveral heaths and moſſes.

CHURCH (S.) ſignifies properly an aſſembly, and by different authors is applied both to profane and religious meetings; and with us ſignifies ſometimes the place built and appointed to meet in for religious worſhip; ſometimes is put for the whole number of profeſſors both prieſts and people, and ſometimes for the doctrine, laws and ordinances of a people or nation, and ſometimes for the clergy only. Many diſputes to little purpoſe have been carried on upon this theſis, which like moſt religious contentions, tend only to deſtroy purity of life and manners, and to introduce hatred and enmity between the opponents and their abetters. In old time, churches were built as far as poſſible from all other common buildings, and ſurrounded with courts, gardens or buildings, belonging to the church; the porch was the outermoſt part, from which there was a paſſage into a cloyſter or ſquare court, with covered galleries round it, ſupported with pillars, under which the poor placed themſelves to receive alms. In the middle of the court was a fountain, where people waſhed their hands and faces before they went to prayers; at the farther end of the cloyſter was a double porch, in which were three doors leading into the body of the church, on the outſide of which and near it were two ſmall buildings, called the baptiſtry and veſtry; the body of the church was divided into three parts by two rows of pillars, which ſupported the galleries; at the farther end eaſtward ſtood the altar, and behind it the preſbyterium or ſanctuary, where the prieſts were during divine ſervice, with the biſhop in the middle of them, whoſe chair was at the very farther end of the church eaſtward; before the altar was a baluſtrade; at the entry into this chancel was the pulpit or deſk raiſed, with ſteps to go up to it, where they read the leſſons, and ſometimes there were two of them with a ſpace between them: The altar or table was made of rich materials, ſometimes of ſilver, ſometimes of gold, ornamented, &c. and often placed on the tomb of a martyr, &c. theſe obſervances brought in much ſuperſtition, a great deal of ignorance, but very little religion.

ECLI'PSE (S.) a privation of the ſun's light from the earth or moon, by the interpoſition of ſome opake body between them and the ſun, or between them and the eye; the firſt kind, (tho' by a vulgar error) is called an eclipſe of the ſun, becauſe it is the earth and not the ſun, that is deprived of light; the other an eclipſe of the moon. The ancients looked upon eclipſes, as preſages of the moſt ſad diſaſters; upon which account they applied themſelves to the ſtudy called aſtrology.

The duration of an Eclipſe, is the time between its immerſion and emerſion; the immerſion is the time the diſk of the body eclipſed begins to be hid; the emerſion is when it begins to re-appear, or come out again.

An Eclipſe of the Sun, is occaſioned by a diametrical interpoſition of the moon betwęen the ſun and earth.

An Eclipſe of the Moon, is occaſioned by a diametrical oppoſition of the earth between the ſun and moon.

Eclipſes of the ſun happen only at the time of new moon, and eclipſes of the moon only at the time of the full moon, and not at every new and full moon, by reaſon of the obliquity of the moon's way, with reſpect to the ſun; but only in thoſe new and full moons which happen in, or very near the nodes.—Eclipſes, as to their kinds, are either total, partial, or annular: Total is when the whole diſk of the body eclipſed is deprived of light: Partial, when only part is darkned: Annular, relates only to eclipſes of the ſun, and happens when the moon being in her apogee, appears much leſs than the ſun, which is moſt ſenſible, when he is in his perigee; the cuſp of the lunar ſhadow not reaching the earth, ſhe becomes in a central conjunction with the ſun; but not being able to cover his diſk, his whole limb or edge appears like a lucid ring. Between an eclipſe of the ſun and moon there are ſeveral remarkable differences; 1. The moon really loſes her light, and is obſcured for want of the illumination of the ſun; but the ſun does not ſuffer any loſs of light, only we are deprived of it. 2. The moon's eclipſe is not only real, but univerſal, and appears always in the ſame quantity on every part of the earth's ſuperficies, where it is viſible; but the ſun's eclipſe is varied, and is greater, leſſer, or not at all, according to the ſeveral parts it is beheld from. 3. The moon always begins to be eclipſed on the weſt ſide of its face or body, and the ſun on the eaſt ſide.

ENGINEE'R (S.) one well ſkilled in making or uſing engines; and particularly in War, a perſon whoſe buſineſs it is to attack or defend towns, caſtles or fortreſſes, and make fire-works, for execution or pleaſure.

E'NGLAND (S.) the beſt and largeſt part of the iſland called Great-Britain, which being divided into three principal parts, viz. England, Scotland, and Wales, is the moſt ſouthern, and is a very populous, rich, flouriſhing kingdom of itſelf, parted from Scotland by the rivers Tweed and Solway, and from part of Wales by the river Dee. With relation to foreign countries, it is bounded eaſtward by the German ocean, which ſeparates it from the Low Countries; ſouthward by the channel, which divides it from France; and weſtward by the Iriſh ſea, or St. George's channel, which parts it from Ireland; being in length, from north to ſouth, viz. from Berwick upon Tweed to Portſmouth in Hampſhire, 320 miles; and in breadth, from Dover to the Land's End, from eaſt to weſt, 230 miles; and as to the globe, lies between 50 and 57 degrees of north latitude; the longeſt day in the moſt northern parts is upwards of 17 hours. It took its name from an ancient people called Angles, inhabitants of Jutland in Denmark, who joining with their neighbours the Saxons, conquered Britain: This name was given it by a ſpecial proclamation of Egbert, the firſt ſole monarch of England ſince the heptarchy. In the reign of Alfred, about 800 years ago, it was firſt divided into ſhires or counties, which are now 40 in number, viz. 18 maritime, and 22 inland, moſt of which take their name from their reſpective chief towns. For the publick adminiſtration of juſtice, by itinerant judges, England is divided into ſix circuits, each containing a certain number of counties, wherein the judges, appointed by the king, take a progreſs twice a year. For the church government England is divided into 23 dioceſes or biſhopricks, each into a certain number of pariſhes. The country is generally flat and open, not overgrown with wild and unwholſome foreſts, nor over-topped with dreadful high mountains; no country is freer from hurtful and ravenous beaſts, venomous ſerpents, and noiſome flies and vermin; watered with the Thames, Medway, Severn, Ouſe, Trent, Humber, Tees, Tine and Tweed; the air for the moſt part groſs, and impregnated with the ſaltneſs of the ſea, from whence ariſes the greateſt inconveniencies the place is ſubject to. The weather is changeable and irregular; but for the moſt part cloudy and rainy, eſpecially in the fall, and winter. For food, no country is more plentiful, either of corn or paſture, for man or beaſt, nor of great and ſmall cattle, both for meat and labour; and the ſea and rivers yield a great abundance of excellent fiſh; the liquor is generally beer or ale, both ſtrong and ſmall, of which they have the beſt in Europe, great quantities whereof are exported for its excellency; for cloaths, the beſt of all woollen manufactures, vaſt quantities whereof are exported all over the world; the timber, eſpecially for ſhipping, much the beſt in the world; its vegetable and mineral productions are not only ſufficient for its own uſe, but it exports more lead than all Europe beſides. Its inhabitants are originally compounded of Saxons, Danes, Normans, Britons and Romans; and as the country is temperate and moiſt, ſo they have naturally a clear complexion; their ſtature comely, their countenance graceful; but for tallneſs and ſtrength the weſtern people commonly exceed; the women generally handſomer than in other places; their temper or diſpoſition neither too fiery and volatile, nor too cold and phlegmatick, by which reaſon they are capable of all ſorts of learning, fit for counſel, and ready for execution, as their warlike exploits with all the neighbouring nations, their fine, numerous and celebrated ſcholars, and their rare and excellent mechanick performances and inventions abundantly ſhew. The eſtabliſhed religion is much the ſame with the foreign Proteſtant churches, as to doctrine, but different as to church diſcipline; altho' there are a multitude of different perſuaſions, which, by the indulgence of the ſtate, are tolerated. The government is by king, lords and commons; and as the commons cannot paſs any law without the lords concurrence, ſo neither of them, nor both of them, can do it without the royal aſſent. The executive power is lodged ſolely in the king, whoſe power, tho' not abſolute, is yet very great; for of himſelf he can make treaties and leagues, peace and war, with foreign ſtates, and preſs men, if occaſion be: He has the choice and nomination of all officers and commanders; the principal direction and command of his forces, and the diſpoſal of all magazines, ammunition, caſtles, ports, forts, havens, and ſhips of war; the militia is wholly at his command; and tho' he cannot legally raiſe money upon his ſubjects without a parliament, yet he has the ſole diſpoſal of the publick money: All counſellors and officers of the ſtate, judges, biſhops and other high dignities in the church, are in his nomination; it is in his power to convene, adjourn, prorogue, and diſſolve parliaments; he can increaſe the number of the houſe of peers by creating more barons, or ſummoning by writ whom he pleaſes; ſo may he alſo increaſe the commons, by beſtowing privileges, to ſend burgeſſes, upon thoſe towns that do not now: It is the king appoints the metal, weight, purity, and value of the coin; and by his proclamation may make any foreign coin be lawful money of England. He is both the fountain of juſtice and mercy, and can pardon malefactors, except in the caſe of appeals: He is alſo the fountain of honour, all titles, both great and ſmall, flowing from him; and is ſupreme as well over eccleſiaſticks as laicks: At his coronation he is anointed with oil, and has the dalmatica and other prieſtly veſtments put upon him: He calls provincial and national ſynods: All eſtates fall to him that want either heirs, or are forfeited, and ſo do the lands of aliens dying without iſſue, &c. All perſons, at their firſt addreſs, kneel to him, and he is at all times ſerved upon the knee. His revenue is very large, ſuppoſed near three millions per annum; his eldeſt ſon bears the title of prince of Wales, ever ſince king Edward IIſt's eldeſt ſon, and he is ſo only by creation; whereas by birth he is earl of Cheſter and Flint, and duke of Cornwall; and in reſpect of Scotland, he is duke of Rothſay, and ſeneſchal of that kingdom. The younger ſons depend altogether upon the king's favour, both for titles of honour and revenues, only they are by birthright counſellors of ſtate. All ſubjects ought to be uncovered in the preſence of the king's children, and to kneel when they are admitted to kiſs their hands. At table their royal highneſſes are always ſerved upon the knee, except in the king's preſence. Next to the royal family, is the lord high ſteward, admiral, conſtable, chancellor, and treaſurer, preſident of the privy-council, privy ſeal, great chamberlain, and earl marſhal, which two laſt only are hereditary: High ſteward, and high conſtable being offices of too great a truſt to be continued, are only ſet up at the king's coronation, except upon the trial of a peer, or peers, for any capital crime; when the king makes a high ſteward for that time, who bears a white ſtaff in his hand, which he openly breaks when the buſineſs is over, and ſo ends his office. The offices of high admiral, chancellor, treaſurer and privy ſeal are ſometimes managed by ſeveral lords commiſſioners. The nobility of England is divided into five degrees, viz. dukes, marquiſſes, earls, viſcounts, and barons, who are all peers, bear the title of lords, and have always enjoyed great privileges. All dukes, marquiſſes and earls have their reſpective titles from the ſhire or part of a ſhire, town, city, caſtle, park or village, except the earl marſhal, which is an officiary title, and the earl Rivers, ſo called, by the name of his family. Barons are ſo denominated for the moſt part, either from their chief ſeat, or a caſtle belonging to the family. The lords chancellor, treaſurer, preſident of the council, and privy ſeal, precede all dukes that are not princes of the blood. By the courteſy of England, the ſons of dukes and marquiſſes are called lords, and their daughters ladies; but the ſons of viſcounts and barons are not called lords, nor their daughters ladies. Next to the nobility, there is a middle rank between them and the common people, called the gentry, which are very numerous, but the law makes no ſuch diſtinction; the gentry conſiſts of knights, eſquires, and gentlemen. All others, that get their living in a mechanick ways, as yeoman, merchants, artificers, tradeſmen, mariners, &c. make up the common people; among the Clergy, the biſhop of Durham is a count palatine, and earl of Sadberg; the archbiſhop of Canterbury is the firſt peer of the realm, and counted next to the royal family; and both he and the archbiſhop of York have the title, like a duke, of his grace; the dignified clergy are either deans, archdeacons, or prebendaries. In every cathedral or collegiate church there is a dean; the inferior clergy are the pariſh-prieſts and deacons; the firſt, vulgarly called parſons, are either rectors or vicars, in all 9655; the vicars properly officiate in thoſe livings called impropriations, of which there are 3845; thoſe who officiate for rectors, &c. that do not reſide in their livings, are called curates. A woman, by the law of England, after ſhe is married, can call nothing her own; nor can the wife make any contract without the huſband's conſent; nor ſet, ſell, give away, or aliénate any thing; it is petty treaſon for a wife to kill her huſband, for which her ſentence is to be burnt alive: All women, of what extraction ſoever, if they marry noblemen, are counted noble; but if a noble woman marries a commoner, ſhe adds no honour to him, tho' he become maſter of all her fortune. If a woman marry that is with child, the child is deemed the huſband's, and is his heir at law; and if a married woman have a child in her huſband's abſence, tho' he has been from her ſeveral years, it is deemed the huſband's. A wife guilty of adultery by the ſtrongeſt preſumptions cannot be divorced by any poſitive law, otherwiſe than a menſa & thoro, or living aſunder, without a liberty of remarrying whilſt either party is alive. The wife having no jointure ſettled before marriage, may challenge, after her huſband's death, the third part of his yearly rents of lands, during her life, and within the city of London, a third part of all his moveables for ever. If a man's wife wrongs another by her tongue or treſpaſs, the huſband muſt anſwer for her fault, and make ſatisfaction, as a father does for a wrong done by his child; and when a man and his wife commit felony together, the law ſuppoſes ſhe was forced thereto, and ſhe is therefore generally diſcharged. By the courteſy of England, a knight's wife is called a lady, which honour ſhe retains with the ſurname of her huſband to her death, tho' ſhe ſhould afterwards marry an inferior perſon; the ſame it is with noble women, who afterwards marry commoners; and thoſe who who are noble by birth or creation, retain their nobility by law, and not by courteſy, tho' they afterwards marry to huſbands of a lower degree than themſelves. As to children, where there is an eſtate of inheritance, the eldeſt ſon commonly inherits the real, and the younger children the perſonal eſtate; but if there be no ſon, the lands as well as the goods are equally divided among the daughters. As to ſervants, they generally live much better than in moſt other countries, having larger wages, more eaſe, and leſs ſubjection, than elſewhere; the apprentices, or thoſe who are bound to manufacturers, &c. for ſeven years, to learn the whole myſtery of the profeſſion, have commonly the worſt of it. The law allows a maſter or miſtreſs to correct an unruly or ſtubborn ſervant, and if the ſervant reſiſts, he thereby incurs a ſevere penalty; but if he kills his maſter or miſtreſs, it is petty treaſon by law. As to the courts of judicature, the parliament, or great council of the nation, deſerves the precedency, which conſiſts of the three eſtates of the realm, and is divided into two houſes, the one called the upper houſe, or houſe of peers, and the other the lower houſe, or houſe of commons; the houſe of lords is the ſupreme court of judicature in the land, from whence there lies no appeal; the houſe of commons conſiſts of 513 knights, citizens, and burgeſſes of England and Wales, choſe by the people by virtue of the king's writ; it conſiſts generally of the flower of the gentry, ſome of them noblemens ſons, privy-counſellors, courtiers, men learned in the law, officers and commanders, merchants, &c. moſt of them poſſeſſed of large fortunes, with the advantage of a liberal and genteel education: By theſe two houſes, with the king's aſſent, old laws are repealed, and new ones made, grievances redreſſed, and ſubſidies granted to the king, as they in their wiſdom think fit. In each houſe a ſpeaker is choſen in the nature of a preſident, before whom the mace is carried, when he goes in and out, and laid down before him while he ſits in the houſe: In the houſe of lords, the lord chancellor, or keeper of the great ſeal, is commonly ſpeaker. For the quicker diſpatch of buſineſs, each houſe chuſe their committees, by whom the matter is examined into, digeſted, and the reſult thereof reported by their chairman to the houſe, to which the houſe agrees, either in whole, or in part; if not, it is commonly re-committed: When a bill is paſſed in either of the houſes, it is ſent to the other for their concurrence; and when both houſes are agreed, it lies in the king's breaſt to make it a law, by his royal aſſent. When the parliament is adjourn'd, all things debated in both houſes remain in ſtatu quo, and at the next meeting may be brought to an iſſue; but when it is prorogued, all bills paſſed in either houſe, without the royal aſſent, muſt at the next aſſembly begin anew, before they can be brought to perfection; when diſſolved, there is no parliament till the king iſſues out new writs. The ſecond court is the king's privy council, conſiſting of noblemen and others of ſeveral capacities; the choice and number are at the king's pleaſure, and of courſe the archbiſhop of Canterbury and the biſhop of London for church affairs, and the two principal ſecretaries of ſtate for ſtate affairs. The courts of juſtice are four; the Chancery, the King's-Bench, the Common-Pleas, and the Exchequer, which are held at Weſtminſter at four ſeveral times of the year, called terms; viz. Eaſter term, which always begins the 17th day after Eaſter, and laſts 17 days; Trinity term begins the 5th day after Trinity Sunday, and laſts 20 days; Michaelmas-term begins November 6, and laſts 23 days; and Hilary term begins January 23, and laſteth 21 days. The Chancery is alſo called the court of Equity, becauſe it moderateth the ſeverity of the letter of the ſtatute law. For a more particular account, ſee The New State of England.

E'PHA, E'PHAH, or E'PHI (S.) an Hebrew meaſure of capacity, of which there were two ſorts, the common one, and that of the ſanctuary; the firſt held 60 pounds of water or liquor of the ſame weight, at 16 ounces to the pound, which makes eight congii, three muids or buſhels, and three ſats; this is the ſame meaſure with the amphora Romana, metreta, pes cubicus or quadrantal, which is about 144 Engliſh gallons; though it is commonly ſuppoſed abundantly leſs, few making it more than 7 gallons. The epha of the ſanctuary was one third larger, ſo that three common ephas were two of the ſanctuary, which reconciles the ſeeming difference about Solomon's brazen ſea; 2 Chron. iv. 5. it is ſaid to contain 3000 ephas, and 1 Kings vii. 26. it is ſaid to hold but 2000.

EPHE'MERIS or EPHEME'RIDES (S.) in Aſtronomy, tables which ſhew the planets places every day at noon; it is by the help of theſe tables, that eclipſes are calculated, the conjunctions and aſpects of the planets found out, and horoſcopes or ſchemes of the heavens conſtructed, &c.

E'PHETA or E'PHETÆ (S.) certain magiſtrates among the ancient Athenians, inſtituted by king Demophon, to look into and judge of caſual murders; there were 50 Athenians, and as many Argives, to diſcharge this truſt, who were not admitted, till they were full 50 years old, and of unſpotted reputation in their life and manners.

EPHIA'LTES (S.) in Phyſick, a diſeaſe commonly called the night-mare, affecting perſons aſleep; it is occaſioned by the ſtomach's being filled with food difficult of digeſtion, which prevents the parties fetching breath freely; young perſons are much more ſubject to it than old; alſo the name of a fictitious giant, the ſuppoſed ſon of Neptune, who grew a finger's breadth every month, and who truſting to his great ſtature and ſtrength, with his brother Otus, made war againſt the gods, and was thrown down into hell by Jupiter.

E'PHOD (S.) a kind of girdle, worn by the Jewiſh prieſts, which was brought from behind the neck over the two ſhoulders, and ſo hanging down before, was put acroſs upon the ſtomach, and ſo carried round the waiſt twice, as a girdle to the tunick, having its extremities brought before, hanging as low as the ground: There were two ſorts of ephods, one of plain linen, for the common prieſts, and another embroidered, for the high prieſt, which was compoſed of gold, blue, purple, crimſon, and twiſted cotton: Upon that part which came upon his two ſhoulders, were two large precious ſtones, upon each of which were engraven the names of ſix tribes: Where it croſſed his breaſt, was a ſquare ornament ſet with 12 precious ſtones, each of which had engraven on it the name of one tribe. It is ſometimes taken for the pectoral, and for the Urim and Thummim; and altho' it was an ornament peculiar to the prieſts, yet it was ſometimes given to laymen: David wore it in the ceremony of removing the ark from the houſe of Obed-Edom to Jeruſalem, &c. The Levites, tho' their buſineſs was to attend the temple, yet they were generally habited as common laymen, and only upon ſolemn occaſions, after the building of the temple, they wore ephods.

E'PHORI (S.) certain Lacedemonian magiſtrates ſet up by Theopompus, king of Sparta, to be a curb upon the regal power; for they were a ſort of check upon the kings; ſome authors ſay there were nine of them choſe at a time, tho' it is certain, there never were above five of them together; their buſineſs related to the care of religion; they preſided in the publick feſtivals and ſhews; they gave ſentence upon thrones, all other magiſtrates being inferior to them; even the kings of Sparta were obliged to obey their ſummons, and appear at the bar, when they were charged with male-adminiſtration; they kept the publick treaſure, made war and peace, and were ſo abſolute, that Ariſtotle makes their government equal to the prerogatives of a monarchy.

EPIBATE'RIUM (S.) among the ancient Greeks, a ſpeech or copy of verſes rehearſed by a perſon of condition to his friends and acquaintance, at his return home after a long abſence, wherein he gave ſolemn thanks to the gods for his ſafe return.

EPICA'RPIUM (S.) in Phyſick, is a medicine like a plaiſter or cataplaſm, compounded of ſharp and penetrating ingredients, as hellebore, garlick, &c. which are bound round the wriſts of perſons at the beginnings of fevers, agues, &c. both to prevent the ill effects thereof, and to remove or cure them.

EPICE'DIUM (S.) among the Greeks and Latins, was a poem rehearſed during the performance of the funeral rites of a perſon of diſtinction.

EPICE'NE (A.) a Grammatical term, ſignifying common to both ſexes, or that the perſon or thing called by that word or name, is ſometimes male, ſometimes female, as, child, means either a boy or girl, parent, a father or mother, &c.

EPICE'RASTICS (S.) in Phyſick, medicines which by their temperate moiſture ſoften or blunt acrimonious humours, and aſſwage pain.

E'PICK (A.) an epithet applied to a poem, the ſubject

ſubject of which is a ſignal action of ſome great hero, ſuch as Homer's Iliad and Odyſſey, Virgil's Æneid, Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, &c. This term is never applied, but to compoſitions, the ſubject whereof is loſty, inſtructive, and ſerious; for which reaſon, comedies cannot be called epick poems, becauſe their actions are more diverting than important; it is alſo called epopea.

EPICRA'SIS (S.) a tempering, mingling, or mixing together; alſo in Phyſick, it is making or giving judgment upon a diſeaſe.

E'PICURE (S.) a perſon that minds little but the gratification of his ſenſes, inclined to riot, and all manner of voluptuouſneſs, eſpecially in eating and drinking.

EPICURE'ANS (S.) an ancient ſect of philoſophers, who adhered to the opinion of Epicurus; they have in all ages been very much cried out againſt, for the badneſs of their morals; but ſeveral authors, both ancient and modern, have endeavoured to vindicate them from this aſperſion, by ſhewing that they who kept cloſe to the doctrine of their maſter, did not place their ſummum bonum, or greateſt happineſs, in any ſenſual or bruti ſh pleaſures, but in the pure pleaſures of the mind, which reſult from the practice of virtue. There was indeed a ſort of men, who pretended to be of this ſect, and interpreting this philoſopher in a groſs ſenſe, made their happineſs conſiſt in a gratification of the ſenſual appetite; but theſe were called the ſophiſts of this ſect.

EPICU'RISM (S.) the doctrine or ſyſtem of philoſophy maintained by Epicurus, who placed his ſummum bonum in the enjoyments of the pleaſures of this life, which ſome interpreted in a ſenſual, and others in an intellectual ſenſe.

EPICURI'ZE (V.) to live or indulge one's ſelf in all manner of ſenſualities.

EPICY'CLE (S.) in the ancient Aſtronomy, a little circle invented to ſolve the ſtations and retrogradations of the planets, whoſe centre is in the circumference of another greater one, which is the eccentrick of a planet; in this eccentrick the centre of the epicycle moves, carrying with it the planet fixed in its circumference, the centre of the planet all the way moving regularly along the circumference of the epicycle; when downwards, according to the order of the ſigns, and contrary when upwards. The great circle is called the deferent of the epicycle; but experience ſhews all theſe inventions as vain as they are uſeleſs, and that the earth's motion not only ſolves the apparent phænomenon, but alſo agrees with calculation, which the others did not.

EPICY'CLOID (S.) a geometrical curve generated by the revolution of a point of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle.

EPIDE'MIA (S.) feaſts of Apollo at Delphos and Miletus, and of Diana at Argos, where thoſe deities were imagined to be preſent on thoſe days among the people, and on the laſt days hymns were ſung to bid them adieu, and ſet them forwards on their journey; and as in their theology they were not allowed to be omnipreſent, time was allowed them to go from place to place to receive the vows of their adorers.

EPIDE'MICK or EPIDE'MICAL (A.) in Phyſick, is ſometimes uſed for a contagious or catching diſeaſe, communicable from one to another, ſuch as the plague, pox, &c. but it is more particularly meant of a general or ſpreading diſorder by means of a contagious or infectious corruption of the air, whereby people are univerſally affected without communicating with others.

EPIDE'RMIS (S.) the cuticula or ſcarf-ſkin; it has neither veins, arteries, nor nerves, whence it is inſenſible.

EPIPLOCE'LE (S.) a kind of hernia or rupture, occaſioned by the falling down of the caul into the ſcrotum or cod.

EPIPLO'ICK (A.) an epithet applied to thoſe veins and arteries, which are diſtributed thro' the caul.

EPI'PLOON (S.) in Anatomy, a fatty membrane, which covers the inteſtines, vulgarly named the caul.

EPISCOPACI'DE (S.) the murdering a biſhop by any of his clergy.

EPI'SCOPACY or EPI'SCOPAL GOVERNMENT (S.) that form of church diſcipline wherein biſhops are the heads and governors, as in the church of England, &c.

EPI'SCOPAL (A.) ſomething relating to a biſhop or biſhoprick.

Epiſcopal Government, is the governing a dioceſs by one perſon, who preſides over a clergy or church, and exerciſes a juriſdiction in religious matters.

Epiſcopal party, or Epiſcopalians, a name given to thoſe who kept to the doctrine of the church of England, and the government of the church by biſhops, as it was before the reformation; they retain the greateſt part of the canon law, the decretals of the popes, the liturgy, &c. more ſtrictly than the Catholicks themſelves in many places do; but in matters of faith they are much the ſame with the Calviniſts.

EPI'SCOPATE (S.) the office, power, or juriſdiction of a biſhop.

E'PISODE (S.) a digreſſion, or a ſeparate incident, ſtory, or action, which an hiſtorian or poet inſerts, and connects with his principal action, that the work may be furniſhed with the greater variety; alſo the ſecond part of the ancient tragedy.

EPISPA'STICKS (S.) thoſe cauterizing medicines that draw bliſters, or collect the humours together in an extraordinary manner into one place.

EPISTEMO'NARCH (S.) an officer in the Greek church, who was appointed to inſpect every thing relating to faith.

EPI'STLE (S.) a letter, or ſhort treatiſe upon any ſubject directed to one or more perſons; this term is ſeldom uſed now, except for letters wrote in verſe, or dedications or prefaces to books; letters wrote in the modern language are not ſtiled epiſtles; but thoſe wrote in the ancient are; in the common-prayer book, one portion of ſcripture uſed in the communion ſervice, is called the epiſtle, becauſe it is commonly taken out of that part of the New Teſtament called the epiſtles, though not always.

EPI'STOLARY (A.) after the mode, or in the form of a letter.

EPI'STYLE (S.) in the ancient Architecture, was what is now called architrave.

E'PITAPH (S.) at firſt ſignified certain verſes ſung at funerals in honour of the dead, and repeated every anniverſary; but at preſent it means an inſcription upon the monument of a deceaſed perſon.

EPITHALA'MIUM (S.) a nuptial ſong, or a poetical compoſition or poem, made for, or upon the marriage between two perſons of diſtinction.

EPITHE'ME (S.) in Pharmacy, a liquid fomentation of a ſpirituous kind, applied externally to the heart or liver, to ſtrengthen and comfort them, or to correct ſome diſorder in or near them.

E'PITHET (S.) a noun adjective joined to a ſubſtantive, to expreſs its quality; it alſo ſignifies a ſurname, or honorary title.

EPITHY'ME (S.) a medicinal plant brought from Candia and Venice; it ſoon periſhes, unleſs it meet with ſome other plant to nouriſh it; thoſe which grow on thyme and flax are the moſt common; its ſeed is very ſmall, and its ſtalk full of long fibres like hairs.

EPLO'YE (A.) in Heraldry, ſignifies diſplay'd, ſhewn abroad, &c.

E'POCH or E'POCHA (S.) in Chronology, an æra, or point of time from whence years are numbered or accounted; that us'd throughout Europe, commences at the nativity of Chriſt; but in England, it was wont to commence at the incarnation, or annunciation of the Virgin Mary, which is nine months before it, commonly called Lady-Day, or the 25th day of March, at which time the year with us uſed to begin; but now, by a late act, it begins on Jan. 1. The Turks, &c. begin their Epoch from the flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina, the 16th of July, 622 of the Chriſtian Epocha, or 5335 of the Julian period; there are abundance of different epocha's uſed both by the Ancients and Moderns, for which ſee the writers of Chronology.

E'PODE (S.) in the Lyrick Poetry of the Greeks, was the third part or end of an ode.

EPO'PEA (S.) in Poetry, the hiſtory or fable which makes the ſubject of an epick poem.

E'PPING or E'PPING-STREET (S.) in Eſſex, has two conſiderable markets weekly, on Thurſday for cattle, and on Friday for proviſions; diſtant from London 15 computed, and 17 meaſured miles.

E'PSOM (S.) in Surrey, about 15 miles from London, which, though but a village, has, by the great concourſe of gentry and rich tradeſmen, who have country ſeats and lodgings in and near it all the ſummer, a market every day, which is plentifully ſupplied with all manner of neceſſaries; it has alſo two fairs annually, viz. in Eaſter holy-days, and the 4th of July; it is exceedingly pleaſant, and reckoned very healthful to drink the purging waters, that were found out here in 1618, though it is not in quite ſo much reputation as formerly.

EPULO'TICKS (S.) in Phyſick, dry, aſtringent medicines, which cicatrize or cloſe up the fleſh ſeparated by a wound or ulcer.

EQUABI'LITY (S.) evenneſs, ſteadineſs, regularity, juſtneſs, proportion, &c.

E'QUABLE (A.) even, alike, equal, of the ſame proportion.

Equable Motion, in Phyſick, is when a body always moves with the ſame velocity, having its motion neither accelerated nor retarded.

EQUABLENESS (S.) a capacity of being made equal; alſo juſtneſs, exactneſs, or truth.

E'QUABLY (Part.) evenly, equally.

E'QUAL (A.) one as much as another, even, juſt, right, &c. a term of relation between two or more things, of the ſame magnitude, quantity, or quality; and when conſidered mathematically, the quantites may indifferently be ſubſtituted the one for the other, without varying the value; for it is a fixed axiom, that any two things that are equal to, or as much as the ſame third, are equal to, or as much as one another; and if to or from equal things you add or ſubſtract equal things, or multiply or divide by equal things, the ſums, remains, products and quotients of the one to the other will be equal.

E'QUAL (S.) a perſon of the ſame rank or dignity with another, or one as well qualified for the performance of any thing, either mechanically or literally, as another.

Equal Angles, are thoſe whoſe ſides have the ſame inclination to one another, or that are meaſured by equal parts of their circles.

Equal Arithmetical Ratios, are thoſe wherein the difference of the two leſs terms is equal to the difference of the two greater; in Opticks, things that are ſaid to be ſeen under equal angles, are called equal. Equal parts of the ſame interval or magnitude, if unequally diſtant from the eye, appear unequal. Equal objects, and at equal diſtances, only one placed directly, and the other obliquely, appear unequal, that placed directly appearing the bigger.

Equal Circle, is one that is drawn with the ſame or an equal radius, or two or more circles, whoſe diameters are of the ſame length, are called equal circles.

Equal Figures, are thoſe whoſe areas are equal, whether the figures are ſimilar or not. The ſegments of ſpheres or circles are of equal concavity or convexity, when they have the ſame ratio or proportion to the diameter of the ſpheres or circles whereof they are parts.

Equal Geometrical Ratios, are thoſe whoſe leaſt terms are ſimilar aliquot, or aliquant parts of the greater, &c.

Equal Hyperbola's, are thoſe whoſe ordinates to their intermediate axes are equal to each other, taken at equal diſtances from their vertices.

Equal Solids, are thoſe which contain each as much as the other, or whoſe ſolidities are equal, whether their external form be the ſame or different.

EQUA'LITY or E'QUALNESS (S.) the likeneſs, ſameneſs, or agreeableneſs of a thing; in Aſtronomy, the circle of equality, according to Ptolemy, was that which was invented to account for the eccentricity of the planets, and make their places to be more eaſily calculated.

EQUALI'ZE (V.) to reduce perſons or things of different orders, or values, to the ſame, or an equivalent value, or order.

EQUANI'MITY (S.) a ſteady and regular diſpoſition of mind, to bear and go through all accidents of life with the ſame evenneſs of mind and contentment.

E'QUANT (S.) a circle in the old Aſtronomy, imagined to be in the plane of the deferent, to regulate and adjuſt the planets motions.

EQUA'TION (S.) an equality, or making one thing equal to another, and is commonly applied to algebraical operations, in which it may be conſidered as the ratio of equality between two quantities differently denominated or expreſſed, as four crowns are equal to one pound ſterling, &c. It is a term alſo uſed in Aſtronomy, and ſometimes means the difference between the time marked out by the ſun's apparent motion, and the time that is meaſured by its real or middle motion, according to which clocks and watches are ſuppoſed to be regulated; becauſe time, abſolutely conſidered, always moves regularly and equably, and therefore thoſe inſtruments that are to expreſs it, ſhould do ſo likewiſe, which ſun-dials cannot poſſibly do, becauſe the ſun goes unequally eaſtwards with reſpect to the equator.

EQUA'TOR (S.) a term much uſed in Aſtronomy and Geography, and means a great immoveable circle of the ſphere, equally diſtant from the two poles of the world, or having the ſame poles with the world; and is ſo called, becauſe when the ſun is in it, the days and nights are equal; in Maps, Charts, and Planiſpheres, it is called the equinoctial line; and by Seamen, emphatically, the line; it divides the globe or ſphere into two hemiſpheres, the one called northern and the other ſouthern; by the paſſages or tranſits of arches of the equator over the meridian, its equal or mean time is eſtimated, which gives frequent occaſion to convert degrees of the equator into time, and the contrary.

E'QUERIES (S.) are particularly uſed among us for officers of the king's ſtables, who, when his majeſty goes abroad, ride in the leading coach, are in waiting one at a time monthly, and have a table with the gentlemen uſhers during that time; formerly they uſed to ride on horſeback by the coach ſide, when the king travelled: There are ſix of them, with ſalaries of 300*l.* per annum each; there are alſo two called by the diſtinct appellation of equeries of the crown ſtables, as being employed in managing and breaking the ſaddle-horſes, and preparing them for the king's riding; one of them is, or always ſhould be in cloſe waiting at court; and when his majeſty rides, holds the ſtirrup, whilſt the maſter of the horſe, or one of their equeries, in his abſence, aſſiſts in mounting him; their ſalary is 256*l.* per annum each.

EQUE'RRY or ECU'RY (S.) is ſometimes taken for, or underſtood of the ſtabling or place for horſes, together with lodgings for the grooms, &c. and is commonly meant of thoſe of kings, princes, &c. and ſometimes it is taken for the principal officer, or he that has the care and charge of the king's horſes; who in England is called maſter of the horſe; and in France, the grand ecuyor, or abſolutely monſieur le grand.

EQUE'STRIAN (A.) ſomething relating to a knight, or man on horſeback; ſo an equeſtrian ſtatue, is a ſtatue repreſenting a perſon mounted on a horſe.

E'QUI (S.) a people bordering upon Rome, and at firſt its enemies, till Quintus Cincinnatus brought them under the yoke; they were frequently puniſhed for their rebellion by Poſthumius Tubertus, and by Fabius totally ſubdued, after he had taken forty of their cities in a little time, for which he had the name Maximus conferred on him, and then they became allies to the Romans.

EQUIA'NGULAR (A.) in Geometry, relates to thoſe figures all the angles whereof are equal.

EQUICRU'RAL (A.) in Geometry, relates to a triangle, uſually called an iſoſceles triangle, or one which has two ſides of the ſame, or an equal length.

EQUIDI'FFERENT (A.) in Arithmetick, is when there is the ſame difference between the other terms of a ſeries, that there is between the firſt and ſecond.

EQUIDI'STANT (A.) in Geometry, is applied to things, all the parts of which are at the ſame or an equal diſtance from one another.

EQUILA'TERAL (A.) in Geometry, is a figure whoſe ſides are all equal.

Equilateral Hyperbola, one, the conjugate axes of which are equal.

EQUILI'BRIUM (S.) a term in Mechanicks, implying that two or more bodies, when compared together, are exactly equal in weight.

EQUIMU'LTIPLE (A.) in Arithmetick and Geometry, is a magnitude or quantity multiplied by the ſame or an equal number or quantity with ſome other number or quantity.

EQUINO'CTIAL (S.) in Aſtronomy, a great immoveable circle of the ſphere, under which the equator moves in its diurnal motion: Whenever the ſun in his progreſs thro' the ecliptick comes to this circle, the day and night are equal all over the globe, which is done twice a year, once in the firſt point of Aries, which is called the vernal equinox, the other time in the firſt point of Libra, which is called the autumnal equinox; theſe interſections of the ecliptick and equinoctial are called equinoctial points.

Equinoctial Colure, that which paſſes thro' the equinoctial points.

Equinoctial Dial, a dial, the plane whereof is parallel to the equinoctial.

E'QUINOX (S.) in Aſtronomy, the time when the ſun enters one of the equinoctial points, at which time the days and nights are exactly equal, and which is twice in the year in all oblique ſpheres.

The Autumnal Equinox, is about the 22d of September, and is ſo called upon account of the ſeaſon of the year.

The Vernal Equinox, is about the 21ſt of March, ſo called, as being the ſpring-time of the year.

EQUI'P (V.) to ſtore or furniſh a perſon, place, or thing with proper conveniences and neceſſaries to go a journey, or to do or perform an act or acts.

E'QUI-

E'QUIPAGE (S.) all ſorts of furniture, conveniences for a journey, voyage, &c. but it is frequently underſtood of the attendance and grandeur that princes and noblemen appear in publick with; alſo the trinkets or toys added to a lady's watch, to hang by her ſide is ſo called.

EQUIPOI'SE (V.) to balance or counterweigh a thing, by putting ſomething of an equal weight againſt it.

EQUIPO'LLENCE or EQUIPO'LLENTNESS (S.) a Logical term importing that ſeveral propoſitions have the ſame meaning, or expreſs only the ſame idea.

EQUIPO'LLENT (A.) of the ſame power, force efficacy, or virtue with ſomething elſe.

EQUIPO'NDERANCY (S.) an equal weighing or poiſing between different things.

EQUIPO'NDERATE (V.) is when one thing is a balance for, or of the ſame weight, force, or value with another.

EQUIPO'NDEROUS (A.) equally heavy, or of the ſame weight.

EQUIPO'NDEROUSNESS (S.) the being of the ſame or an equal weight.

E'QUITABLE (A.) juſt, reaſonable, fair, upright, without hypocriſy or guile.

E'QUITY (S.) is that virtue, by which we render to every one his juſt due, according to the ſeveral circumſtances a perſon may be under in relation to the laws of ſociety; it is ſometimes confounded with juſtice, which rather ſeems to reward or puniſh, according to ſome ſtated rule or law, than according to the varying circumſtances of an action, for which reaſon we have the court of Chancery or Equity to moderate the ſeverity of the letter of the law, and to regard the controverſy according to the rule of equity and conſcience, rather than according to ſtrict legal juſtice.

EQUI'VALENCE (S.) the agreement in nature, quality, or circumſtances, between ſeveral things propoſed.

EQUI'VALENT (S.) any thing that is exchanged or given for another, ſuppoſed to be of the ſame value, though of a different ſort or kind.

EQUI'VOCAL (A.) ſuch words or propoſitions where the ſenſe is not determinate, that which is doubtful, or may be turned or underſtood more ways than one; alſo ſuch words as are of the ſame ſound, but have quite different meanings, as a bull, a beaſt ſo called, and a bull, a blundering miſtake, nonſenſical expreſſion, &c.

EQUI'VOCALLY (Part.) dubiouſly, ambiguouſly, ſpoken with a mental reſervation on purpoſe to deceive the hearer.

EQUI'VOCATE (V.) to ſhuffle; to ſay one thing and mean another; to ſpeak dubiouſly, ſo that the hearer ſhall not be able poſitively to determine whether he underſtands the ſpeaker or not.

EQUIVOCA'TION (S.) a ſhuffling, deluſive expreſſion, or ſpeaking ſo dubiouſly, that nothing can be certainly concluded, what was the intent of the ſpeaker.

EQUU'LEUS (S.) a puniſhment uſed by the Ancients, and ſtill retained in gariſons, as a part of military diſcipline, and is what is now called riding the wooden horſe; which is done by ſetting the offender upon a wooden inſtrument with a ſharp ridge in the middle, widening much in its deſcent, and tying weights to his legs; there is alſo a conſtellation under this name in the northern hemiſphere, conſiſting by Ptolemy's and Tycho's catalogue of 4 ſtars, and by Mr. Flamſteed's of 10 ſtars.

E'RA (S.) the ſame with epocha, a word introduced by the Spaniſh chronologers, to expreſs the beginning of ſome extraordinary change, as of reigns, &c. The moſt noted are that of Nabonaſſer, generally fixed on Feb. 26, in the 3967th year of the Julian period, in the firſt year of the 8th Olympiad, and 6th of Rome; that of the Greek Seleucidæ, fixed in the 442d of Rome, 312 years before Chriſt, when Seleucus Nicanor ſettled in Syria, 12 years after the death of Alexander the Great; the Chriſtian, which is placed by different authors in the 448, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53 of Rome.

ERA'DICATE (V.) to pluck up by the roots; to take away the very ſeeds or foundation of a diſeaſe, building, &c.

ERADICA'TION (S.) a plucking up by the roots; a total and abſolute deſtruction or removal of perſons or things.

ERA'DICATIVES (S.) in Phyſick, are very ſearching and ſtrong medicines, that pierce, as it were, into the very inmoſt receſſes of a diſeaſe, and bring it away.

ERA'SED (A.) blotted or ſcraped out, pulled down or plowed up, totally defaced, demoliſhed or removed away; in Heraldry, it is any creature repreſented with its head, limbs, &c. torn or rent off by violence.

ERA'SEMENT (S.) a ſcratching or blotting out any words not agreed to in a deed, ſo that they cannot poſſibly be ſeen or read.

ERA'STIANS (S.) the diſciples or followers of Eraſtus, a phyſician of Baden in Switzerland, a perſon of great reputation in his profeſſion, who, among other principles, maintained that the church had not the power of diſcipline and excommunication, but the civil magiſtrate only.

ERA'TO (S.) one of the nine muſes that preſides over love poems; ſhe is generally repreſented like a young maiden of a gay humour, crowned with myrtle and roſes, holding a harp in the right hand, and a bow in the other, with a little winged Cupid placed by her, armed with his bow and arrows.

ERE (Part.) before that, rather than, &c.

E'REBUS (S.) called by the poets the god of hell, born of Chaos and Tenebræ; it is likewiſe the name of one of the infernal rivers.

ERE'CT (A.) any thing upright, or ſtanding ſtrait, or perpendicularly.

EXCOM-

EXCOMMUNICA'TION (S.) a church cenſure, or ſhutting out from communion; with the Jews there were three degrees of it; the firſt called Nidui, that is, ſeparation or diſtance, called in the New Teſtament, John ix. 22. Caſting out of the ſynagogue; the perſon thus excommunicated was obliged to ſtand off from company the ſpace of four cubits, and neither in eating, ſleeping, bathing, &c. to come nearer any perſon for thirty days, unleſs he had ſubmitted to penance, but was allowed to be preſent at their religious ceremonies, and might inſtruct or be inſtructed; it was alſo lawful for him to hire ſervants, or to go to ſervice. If he continued impenitent, and did not give the ſynagogue ſatisfaction, his ſeparation was doubled or trebled, and ſometimes continued to his death, in which caſe his male children were not admitted to circumciſion, till he gave proofs of his repentance; and if he died impenitent, they hung a ſtone upon his herſe, to ſhew he deſerved to be ſtoned, and therefore nobody made any mourning for him, or accompanied his corps; neither was he buried in the grave of his anceſtors, but thrown into a place by himſelf. The ſecond kind they call Cherem, which, 1 Cor. v. 5. is called the delivering to Satan; this was publickly denounced in the face of the whole church, with the addition of the curſes mentioned in Moſes's law; when theſe curſes were publickly denounced, they had candles burning, which were put out at the end of the imprecations, to intimate, that the perſon under this cenſure was to have no ſhare in the light of the regions above: This was executed upon the inceſtuous Corinthian, and alſo upon Hymeneus and Alexander. In the Chriſtian Church, thoſe thus excommunicated, uſed to be conſigned up to the poſſeſſion of evil ſpirits, to be afflicted with terrible diſeaſes. The third and moſt formidable kind is in the New Teſtament called Maranatha, or ſubject to divine vengeance; others will have it ſignify, this is death, to intimate, that the condemned perſon was delivered over to death in the ſevereſt ſenſe; to which ſome think St. John alludes, when he ſays, There is a ſin unto death. The Sadducees had a ſort of excommunication among them, that comprehended all the three kinds, called Tetragrammaton, which they pronounced in the following manner: At a full congregation in the temple, 300 prieſts, having each of them a trumpet, and the books of the law lying by them, they uſed to begin the ſolemn imprecation by ſounding their trumpets; then the Levites ſung, and excommunicated the Samaritans in their muſick, with all the three degrees of excommunication, curſing them by the myſterious name of Jehovah, by the decalogue, and with all the curſes of the inferior and ſuperior courts of judicature, charging all the Jews not ſo much as to eat with them, and declaring, that no Samaritan ſhould be admitted a proſelyte, nor have any ſhare in the reſurreſtion of the juſt. The heathens had alſo their excommunication, and thoſe under that cenſure were forbid being at the ſacrifices; and afterwards they were delivered over to evil Genii with imprecations; and as this was looked upon as the ſevereſt puniſhment, it was only inflicted upon incorrigible criminals; it deſcended from the Greeks to the Romans, though very ſeldom uſed; it was alſo the ſevereſt puniſhment among the ancient Gauls. The primitive Chriſtians practiſed two kinds; the Medicinal, which excluded thoſe under ſentence for a time, or till they were likely to die; and the Mortal, pronounced upon hereticks or impenitents. It was a general rule, that a perſon ſentenced by provincial or dioceſan authority, was not to be received into any church; and from a good and wholeſome law turned into prieſtcraft and profit, ſometimes one patriarch, biſhop or council undoing what another had done, purely to carry on ſome ſecular deſign, without the leaſt regard to the innocent and the guilty, or without any other intention, than to gain power over the party or people againſt whom it was thundered. Hiſtory furniſhes ſo many inſtances of this, under the papal uſurpation, that it would be endleſs to enumerate them. Sometimes, when the pope and king quarrelled, a whole nation (and particularly our own ſeveral times) has been laid under an interdict and excommunication, which is contrary to the ancient diſcipline, which very rarely drew the ſpiritual ſword, and never but upon ſpiritual occaſions, the principal effect being to exclude the excommunicate the ſociety of the faithful, depriving him of the benefits of divine ſervice and the ſacraments, &c. This cenſure not extending to any civil forfeiture, whatever belongs to him, as a man, a citizen, a father, a huſband, or a king, by the law of nature, of nations, or the conſtitutions of his country, remains untouched: However, religion ſo influenced law, that in the empire, if the excommunicated did not procure abſolution within a time limited, they were liable to impriſonment and forfeiture; and in England, if it was not within forty days, the excommunication was returned into the Exchequer, and a writ de excommunicato capiendo awarded; but God be thanked, ſince the Reformation, and particularly ſince the Revolution, very few inſtances of this arbitrary power have been executed.

EXCO'RIATE (V.) to pull, ſtrip, or flea off the ſkin from any animal.

EXCORIA'TION (S.) the fleaing the ſkin from off an animal; and in Phyſick, ſignifies the tearing, rubbing, or fretting off the ſkin; or the internal diſeaſe commonly called the gripes, occaſioned by gnawing or fretting humours, E'XPIATE (V.) to give ſatisfaction, or make an atonement for a man's ſins, by ſuffering the puniſhment due thereto, or paying an equivalent inſtead thereof.

EXPIA'TION (S.) a ſatisfaction, atonement, or amends; among the Jews, there were ſeveral ſorts of expiations; as, for ſins of ignorance committed contrary to the law; for purifying themſelves from certain legal pollutions, ſuch as after a woman's lying in, or after a leper's being cured of his leproſy, &c. The ceremonies obſerved were, that the party brought his victim to the tabernacle, put his hand upon his head, confeſſed his fault, and ſlew his victim in the court; at the place where the burnt-offerings were offered to the north of the altar, the prieſt took the blood of the beaſt, with ſome of it upon his finger, he touched the horns of the altar of burnt-offerings, poured out the remainder of the blood at the foot of the altar, took away all the fat which covered the inteſtines and kidnies, and burnt it upon the altar; laſtly, the prieſt prayed for the penitent, and he was pronounced pardoned. They might offer a goat, a ram, a lamb, or kid, or two pigeons; and if very poor, a ſmall parcel of meal would do. The great day of expiation was kept upon the 10th of the month Tizri, which anſwers fwers to our September; the Jews call it Kipper, or Chippur, and this was for the whole people or nation, at which time the high prieſt waſhed, not only his hands and feet, as uſual, but his whole body, dreſſed himſelf in plain linen like the common prieſts, wearing neither his purple robe, ephod, nor pectoral, becauſe he expiated for his own, as well as the people's ſins. For firſt, he offered a bullock and a ram for himſelf and all the prieſthood: He put his hand upon the heads of theſe victims, and confeſſed his own ſins, and the ſins of his houſe; and then he received from the princes of the people two goats, for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, to be offered in the name of all the people; it was determined by lot which of the two goats ſhould be ſacrificed, and which let go: After which, putting ſome of the fire of the altar of burnt-offerings into a cenſer, he threw incenſe upon it, and ſo entered into the ſanctuary. After he had perfumed it, he went out, took ſome of the blood of the bullock, carried it into the ſanctuary, and dipping his fingers into it, he ſprinkled it ſeven times between the ark and the vail, which ſeparated the holy ſanctuary. Then coming out a ſecond time, he killed the goat beſide the altar of burnt-offerings, upon which the lot fell to be ſacrificed; the blood whereof he carried into the ſanctuary, and ſprinkled it ſeven times alſo between the ark and the vail, as before. From thence he returned into the court of the tabernacle, and ſprinkled both ſides of it with the blood of the goat; during all this time, none of the prieſts or people were permitted to be in the tabernacle, or the court. After this, the high prieſt came to the altar of burnt-offerings, moiſtened the four horns of it with the blood of the goat and young bullock, and ſprinkled it ſeven times with the ſame blood. After which, the goat that was to be ſet at liberty, being brought to the high prieſt, he put his hand upon his head, confeſſed his own and the people's ſins, and then gave him to a perſon to carry him to ſome deſart place, and let him go. This done, the high prieſt waſhed himſelf all over in the tabernacle, he dreſſed himſelf in his pontifical habit, and then ſacrificed two rams for a burnt-offering, one for himſelf, and the other for the people. This was one of the principal ſolemnities among the Jews. It was a day of reſt, and ſtrict faſting. They confeſſed themſelves ten times on this day, reckoning from the eve before ſupper.

EYE or AYE (S.) in Suffolk, a borough town, by some called the Island, because it is surrounded by a brook; its market is weekly on Saturday; it has one large handsome church, and is governed by two bailiffs and a common-council, and sends two members to parliament; the women are employed in making bone lace; distant from London 74 computed, and 92 measured miles.

EYE (S.) the wonderful organ and instrument whereby the soul sees or perceives objects nearer or farther off, &c. The form whereof is for the most part globulous, or somewhat of the spheroidal form, which is by far the most commodious optical form, as being fittest to contain the humours within, and to receive the images of objects from without, the humours being thereby laid commodiously together, to perform the office of refraction, and the retina, and every other part, neatly adapted regularly to receive the images from without, and to convey them accordingly to the common sensory in the brain; to this may be added, the fitness of this form for the motion of the eye this way or that way, so that it may adjust itself to the objects it would view. The situation is as commodious as the form, being placed in the head, near the most sensible vital part, the brain; whereby it is capable of taking in the greater number of objects, and being the best defended and secured. In a man, and some other creatures, it is placed to look directly forward chiefly, yet so ordered, that it takes in near the hemisphere before it. In birds, and some other creatures, the eyes are so seated, as to take in near the whole sphere, that they may the better seek their food, and avoid danger; and in some creatures so as to see best behind, or on each side them, whereby they can see their enemy that pursues them, and so escape. The motion of the eye is every way, for the better and more easy and distinct reception of the visual rays; but where nature denies motion to the eyes or head of some creatures, she hath wonderfully provided by setting the eyes of those creatures out at a distance from the head (as in spiders, snails, &c.) to be circumvolved here and there, one this, the other that way, at pleasure; and in creatures whose eyes are without motion, as in divers insects, they have either more than two eyes, or else their eyes are nearly two protuberant hemispheres, each often consisting of a prodigious number of other little segments of a sphere. The size is different; in some animals large, in others small, according to the size and office of the creature itself; the number is no less than two, and in some animals more, yet the object appears but one. The mechanism is as admirable as the use is great; and to pass by its veins, arteries, &c. common to other parts of the body, let us first observe its muscles, tunicks, and humours. The muscles are admirably adapted to move it any, or every way; and yet so, as always to keep that parallelism of the eye which is necessary to true vision; and, according to the posture of the creature, either erect or prone, duly prepares and observes an exact libration, and thereby prevents unseemly contortions, and incommodious vagations, but also with great readiness and exactness applies itself to every object, whether it be near, or at a greater distance. As to the tunicks, or coats of the eye, many things might be taken notice of, the prodigious fineness of the archnoides, the acute sense of the retina, the delicate transparency of the cornea, and the firm and strong texture of that, and the sclerotica too, each of them, in this and every other respect, in the most accurate manner, adapted to the place in which it is, and the business it is there to perform. But for a sample, I shall only take notice of that part of the uvea which makes the pupil. As we are forced to use various apertures to our optick glasses, so nature hath made a far more compleat provision in the eyes of animals, to shut out too much, and to admit sufficient light, by the dilatation and contraction of the pupil. But it deserves particularly to be remarked, that these pupils are in diverse animals of diverse forms, according to their peculiar occasions. In man it is round; in some other creatures of a longish form; in some transverse, with its aperture large; in others the fissure is erect, and capable of opening wide, and ſhutting cloſe. The next obſervable is the humours, and particularly the cryſtalline. And, paſſing by its incomparable tranſparency, its exact lenticular form, its curious araneous membrane that conſtringeth and dilateth it, and ſo varieth its focus (according to the opinion of ſome curious obſervers) and its admirable approach to and from the retina, by help of the circular ligament, according as objects are far off or near; we ſhall particularly obſerve the prodigious art and finery of its conſtituent parts, it being, as obſerved by ſome late nice microſcopical obſervations, compoſed of diverſe thin ſcales, and theſe made up of one ſingle minuteſt thread or fibre, wound round and round, ſo as not to croſs one another in any one place, and yet to meet, ſome in two, and ſome in more different centres; a web not to be woven, an optick lens not to be wrought by any art leſs than infinite wiſdom. The whole ſtructure and apparatus of the eye tends to this, that there be produced a diſtinct and vivid collection in the bottom of the eye, directly under the pupil, of all the rays, which proceeding from any point of an object, and entering the eye, penetrate the cryſtalline humour; and that ſo many points be painted in the bottom of the eye, as are conſpicuous in an object, that ſo a ſmall image like thereto may be repreſented on the retina.—It is alſo applied to ſeveral other things beſide that already deſcribed; for with the Architects, any round window made in a pediment, an attick, the reins of a vault, &c. is called an eye; ſo the aperture at the top of a dome, commonly covered with a lanthorn, is called the eye of the dome. So the centre of the volute, or that point wherein the helix or ſpiral, whereof it is formed, commences: Or the little circle in the middle of the volutes, wherein are found the 13 centers for the deſcribing the circumvolutions thereof, is called the eye of the volute; in Gardening, the little bud or ſhoot inſerted into a tree, by way of graft, is called an eye; and Phyſicians frequently call any aperture an eye; in Printing, it is the graving in relievo on the face or top of the letter, that only making the impreſſion; ſo the eye of the letter e is the hollow part cut off at the top by the croſs line; with Jewellers, it is the luſtre or brilliant of diamonds and precious ſtones, commonly called the water; in Aſtronomy, a ſtar of the firſt magnitude in the conſtellation Taurus, it called the bull's eye, or aldebaran; there is a precious ſtone, by ſome called cat's eye, by others lunar eye, very ſhining and tranſparent, of diverſe colours, and commonly of an oblong form; in Phyſick, there is a diſtemper called blaſted eye, which occaſions the patient to ſleep with the eye half open; alſo goat eye, when there is a white ſpeck on the cornea; and in common, locks, rings, &c. are called eyes; and in Ships, there are dead eyes, &c. beſides all which there is the camera obſcura, or artificial eye.

EYE'-BRIGHT (S.) an herb ſaid to be good for clearing, helping, and ſtrengthening the eyes.

EYE'-BROW (S.) the hairy part of the external part of the eye, that grows upon the top bone, that projects over a little, to keep the ſweat, &c. from falling into the eye.

E'YESS (S.) a young hawk, juſt or lately taken from the neſt.

EZE'KIEL (S.) a man's name, and eſpecially of the third of the greater prophets in the Old Teſtament; he was the ſon of Buzi, of the ſacerdotal race, and was carried captive to Babylon, by Nebuchadnezzar, along with Jehoiachim, king of Judah, in the year of the world 3405 or 3409, before Chriſt 599 years. After his captivity he was endued with the ſpirit of prophecy upon his coming to Meſopotamia, in the 30th year of his age, according to ſome, or according to others the 30th year after renewing the covenant with God by Joſiah, which was in the 5th year of Ezekiel's captivity; he prophecied 20 years; during which time he took great pains to reform his countrymen the Jews, who were fallen into idolatry, by repreſenting to them, under diverſe myſterious repreſentations, both their preſent and future condition, which their apoſtaſy and other enormous crimes had and ſhould bring upon them, and alſo their reſtoration. He not only foretold what ſhould happen to his own people and nation, but likewiſe to ſeveral others, and eſpecially ſuch as were bordering upon Judea, &c. The ſanhedrim, for ſome time, refuſed to regiſter this book in the canonical ſcripture, upon account of its obſcurity, and ſeeming contradiction of ſome part of it with the law of Moſes: The principal obſcurity is in the beginning and end, for which reaſon the Jews adviſe their pupils not to read it till they are 30 years old. He is very full of beautiful ſentences and noble compariſons, and through the whole diſcovers a great deal of learning and ſkill in pagan affairs. His prophecies or viſions are 22 in number, arranged in the order of time they were delivered by him.

F.

THIS letter by ſome is reckoned a mute, by others a ſemi vowel, and has with us much the ſame ſound with the Greek φ for which reaſon ſome affirm that in words of Greek extract we ſhould write Ph, and in thoſe of Latin original F. Suetonius ſays, that the emperor Claudius invented this and two other letters, and that it had the force of V conſonant, and was wrote inverted ⅎ. In Numerals, it expreſſes 40, and when with a daſh, F. 40,000; the baſs cliff in Muſick is called the F cliff; and in Phyſical Preſcriptions, F. ſignifies fiat, or let it be done; in Engliſh Words, ſuch as end in F have them doubled, as ſtaff, ſtiff, muff, &c.

FA (S.) the name of one of the notes in the common ſcale of muſick, which is naturally but half a note or tone, and is what is called a flat note, unleſs made a whole or ſharp note, by prefixing this mark ♯ before it.

FAINT (A.) weak, imperfect, without life, vigour, ſtrength, or reſolution.

FAIR (A.) beautiful, handſome, clean, plain, juſt, honeſt.

FAIR (S.) a publick market, in ſome places kept once, in others twice, &c. in a year; among the old Romans, fairs were holidays, in which there was an intermiſſion of labour and pleadings; among the Chriſtians, upon any extraordinary ſolemnity, particularly the anniverſary dedication of a church, tradeſmen were wont to bring and ſell their wares, even in the church-yards, which continued, eſpecially upon the feſtival of the dedication, many ages. Thus we find a great many fairs kept at theſe feſtival dedications, as at Weſtminſter on St. Peter's day, at London on St. Bartholomew's, Durham on St. Cuthbert's day, &c. But the great numbers of people being often the occaſion of riots and diſturbances, the privilege of holding a fair was granted by a royal charter; at firſt they were only allowed in towns and places of ſtrength, or where there was ſome biſhop or governor of condition, to keep them in order; in proceſs of time there were ſeveral circumſtances of favour added, people having the protection of

of a holiday, and allowed the freedom from arrests, upon the score of any difference not arising upon the spot; they had likewise a jurisdiction allowed them to do justice to those that came thither, and therefore the most inconsiderable fair with us has a court belonging to it, which takes cognizance of all manner of causes and disorders growing and committed upon the place, called pye-powder, or pedes pulverizati. Some fairs are free others charged with tolls and impositions; at free fairs, &c. all traders, &c. whether natives or foreigners are allowed to enter the kingdom, and are under the royal safe-guard and protection in coming and returning, they and their agents, with their goods, &c. also their persons and goods are exempt from all duties, impositions, tolls and servitudes, and such merchants going to, or coming from the fair cannot be arrested, or their goods stopped. The prince only has power to establish fairs of any kind. These free fairs make a pretty considerable article in the commerce of Europe, especially those of the Mediterranean, or inland parts, as Germany, &c. The most famous are that of Francfort and Leipsic, the fairs of Novi in the Milanese, that of Riga, Arch-Angel, of St. Germain at Paris, of Lyons, of Guibray in Normandy, and of Beaucaire in Languedoc; those of Porto-Bello, Vera Crux, and the Havanna, are the most considerable in America.

FAITH (S.) is the belief or assent, that the mind gives to a proposition advanced by another, upon the authority of the proposer, or some other, and not upon any certain knowledge or conviction in our own minds, that it is really and absolutely so; and when understood religiously, it is called a theological virtue, whereby we are persuaded to assent to all those truths relating to God, which he has revealed to us by scripture, which accompanied by a conformable practice to the rules therein delivered, gives eternal life and happiness to the believer. Sometimes it is applied to the sincere and honest fidelity with which a man performs his promises, duty, and engagements to another. As to the particular articles of faith, the church collectively in councils, synods, &c. as well as the members singly have differed as to their number and extent; but those most universally received, are contained in that called the apostles creed. In Painting or Sculpture, faith is represented by a beautiful woman cloathed in white, and holding a gold cup in her hand.

FA'KIR or FA'QUIR (S.) a sort of dervises, or religious vagabond Mahometans, who live on alms; when they go many in company, they have a superior, whom they obey; this and the other chief Fakirs garment consists of three or four yards of orange-coloured linen, which they tie round them, so that one end hangs between the thighs to cover their nakedness, and a tyger's skin, which hangs over their shoulders, and is tied under their chins, whilst the ordinary ones have only a cord round their waist, with a piece of linen to hide their privities. Their hair is wove in tresses, and forms a kind of turban. Each carries a hunting-horn, which he blows, when he arrives at, or departs from any town, and an iron rake, wherewith they clean the places they design to rest in: Sometimes having raked the dust into an heap, they use it for a bed to lie the easier. When they come to any town, their chief sends some of the company to beg for the rest, and distributes equally what they bring; and if more than sufficient for the present necessity, he gives it to the poor, reserving nothing for the next day, deluding the vulgar with this false zeal, and making them believe all they say is oraculous. There are some called idolatrous Fakirs, who, having no certain mansion, abandon themselves to li-ſorts of impurities, pretending a privilege to do all ſorts of actions, without danger of ſin. Their chief is diſtinguiſhed by having a greater number of pieces in his garment than the reſt, and by having a chain of a fathom long tied to his leg; when he deſigns to reſt in any place, a cloth being ſpread upon the ground, he ſits down thereon, and gives audience, while his diſciples publiſh his virtues, and the favours he receives from God in the neighbourhood, which makes the people flock to hear him. Some of them having 200 diſciples, which are called together by beat of drum, and ſound of horn; and when they march, they have a ſtandard, lances, and other weapons. The third ſort of Fakirs are the children of poor people, who retire into moſques to ſtudy the law, in order to become moula's or doctors; they learn the Alcoran by heart, marry three or four wives, out of devotion, and in imitation of Mahomet, to get a greater number of children, and obſervers of the law of their prophet. The penitent Fakirs affect a certain poſture, which ſome obſerve all their life-time, holding their hands acroſs over their heads; others turning them behind them, or holding their heads down without ſpeaking a word, or looking at any body; ſome ſtand upon one foot holding a chafing-diſh, in which they burn frankincenſe to their god; in all theſe poſtures they are quite naked. The Indian women are ſo extravagantly ſuperſtitious, that they expect particular favours in their marriage, by a ſhameful way of kiſſing theſe penitents, who turn up their eyes in a frightful manner, when theſe women approach them. They have other Fakirs that feed theſe, and in ſo great repute are theſe Fakirs, that it is reported there are more than two millions of them in the Indies, and that great perſons belonging to the court, frequently become members of them.

Theſe baulks, timbers, or planks, are brought chiefly from Norway and Sweden.

FIRE (S.) among the old Philoſophers, was deemed an element in nature, created with the property of heating, burning, or deſtroying whatever had too great a mixture of it; but among the preſent ſet of ſearchers into nature, it is defined to be only the effect of a violent or rapid motion, excited in or upon the conſuming body; ſo that whatever heats, warms, or burns, is called fire. Sometimes it means the courage, mettle, ſpirit, vivacity, or briſkneſs of a man, or other creature, and ſometimes only ſuch combuſtibles, as coals, coals, wood, &c. burnt, either to warm us, or dreſs our victuals, &c. Fire, or the ſun, was, and is worſhipped by ſeveral of the Heathens, as a deity, who, in imitation of it, kept continual fire burning upon their altars; in the Scripture, God is ſaid often to have appeared in, or encompaſſed with fire, as to Moſes in the burning buſh, on mount Sinai, to the prophets Iſaiah, Ezekiel, and St. John; the wrath of God is deſcribed by a conſuming fire, and the angels, as his miniſters, are compared to it; and the puniſhment of impenitent ſinners by everlaſting burnings, &c. Several diſeaſes go by this name, as the St. Anthony's fire, &c. alſo ſundry mechanical performances called fire-works, both for war and paſtime, as bombs, rockets, &c. alſo ſeveral natural phenomena, as the walking fire, called alſo the Jack-a-lanthorn, &c.

FU'NERAL (S.) the laſt offices paid to the dead, or the ſolemn and ceremonious burial of a perſon, according to the particular cuſtoms of particular countries; the old Romans, after they had cloſed the eyes of the dead, called out aloud to him ſeveral times, to ſee if he was not fallen into a ſwoon, or ſome lethargical diſtemper; after this they waſhed the corps with warm water, and rubbed it with perfumes; this being done, they put a ſort of white gown upon him, and brought him to the door, with his feet to the ſtreet; then they ſtuck branches of cypreſs before the houſe: This ceremony continued ſeven days, and upon the eighth they carried the corps where it was to be burnt, which cuſtom was introduced, becauſe the enemy ſhould not expoſe the dead bodies of the ſoldiers that were killed in the wars. Among people of fortune, the bier or coffin was generally carried by relations; and at the funerals of emperors and conſuls, the ſenators and magiſtrates of the republick did this office; but the common people were carried by veſpillones, or common bearers: When perſons of blood, or eminent for their poſts in the government, or for remarkable actions, were brought to the pile, the diſtinctions of their quality were carried before their coffin, as the faſces, ſword, mace, their anceſtors in wax-work, the plunder they had gained from the enemy, the civic, mural, &c. crowns, which they had deſerved, or whatever might add to their figure and reputation. The primitive Chriſtians buried their dead after the Jewiſh manner, firſt waſhing, then embalming them; they wrapped the corps in fine linen or ſilk, and ſometimes put them on rich habits: They laid them forth three days, during which time they conſtantly attended the dead body, and paſſed the time in watching and praying by it; then they carried it to the grave with torches or flambeau's, ſinging pſalms and hymns to the praiſe of God, and expreſſing their hopes of the reſurrection. They recommended the dead likewiſe in their prayers, received the communion, and made their agapæ or love-feaſts, and diſtributed alms to the poor. At the end of the year they made a freſh commemoration for them, and ſo from year to year, beſides the ſtanding commemoration for the dead, always joined with the holy euchariſt; they frequently put into the grave ſeveral things, either as marks of honour to the the deceaſed, or to preſerve his memory, as the badges of his dignity, the inſtruments and acts of his martyrdom, an epitaph, or at leaſt his name, and ſometimes they threw in medals, laurel leaves, ſome croſſes, and the goſpel; they had a religious ambition to be buried near the bodies of the martyrs, which introduced the cuſtom of burying in churches and church-yards, and the cuſtom of erecting tombs or monuments over them, it being the ancient cuſtom always to bury without the walls of the city. From what is ſaid above, an eaſy concluſion may be made how we came by our preſent cuſtoms.

Funeral Oration, a ſpeech or ſermon made at the grave, or upon the death of a perſon of note; the Romans had a cuſtom of giving dead people of quality the reſpect of an harangue, which was ſpoken at the great ſquare at Rome, in the roſtra, where the company who attended the corps, ſtopped; the ſpeaker began with the antiquity of his pedigree, and the figure he made in the republick; then he ſet forth the regularity of his behaviour, the obligingneſs of his temper, his remarkableneſs for the diſcharge of ſome publick office, &c. Sometimes theſe ſpeeches were made by the children of the deceaſed, and ſometimes by an orator appointed by the ſtate; and this ceremony was paid to the ladies likewiſe, which was allowed them, as a reward for their generous aſſiſting the commonwealth upon an extraordinary emergence, by preſenting it with their necklaces, jewels, &c. Popilia was the firſt Roman lady who had an oration pronounced at her funeral, which was done by her ſon Craſſus; and it is obſerved by Cicero, that Julius Cæſar did the like for his aunt Julia, and his wife Cornelia.

G.

G Is the ſeventh letter and fifth conſonant in our alphabet, but in the Greek and oriental languages it is the third; it is one of the mutes, and cannot be ſounded without the aſſiſtance of ſome vowel. It is frequently changed by Latin authors in their preterperfect tenſes into C, and ſometimes into S or X; the Ancients made frequent uſe of N for gn, as the Spaniards do now; it was anciently uſed for a numeral, and ſignified 400, with a daſh, thus $\overline{G}$, 40,000; in Muſick, it is the mark for the treble cliff, and is now made uſe of for almoſt all the upper parts above the baſs, except in church muſick where the tenor cliff is ſtill retained; in Engliſh, it has a hard and ſoft ſound, as it happens to come before particular letters, viz. before a, o, and u, generally a hard or guttural ſound, as in game, gore, gun, &c. and before e and i, a ſoft or eaſy ſound, as in geſture, giant, &c. gh at the end of words ſound like ff, as rough, tough, &c. it is written in many words where the ſound is not perceived, as in ſign, reign, &c.

GA'RTER (S.) in Heraldry, is the moiety or half a bend; also a ribband, or other proper stuff to wind about the leg to keep the stockings from falling down; among us here in England, there is a most noble order of knighthood called by this name, of which the king is always at the head: As to the reason of the institution, as it did not proceed from so trivial a ground, as a lady's garter, so neither had king Edward III. who was the founder of the order, any regard to the garter or leathern thong, which king Richard I. in his attempt upon Cyprus and Acon, ordered to be tied about the legs of his officers, to animate their courage, by such a particular distinction; but Edward III. being a prince of a warlike disposition, and engaged in a war with France, made it his business to engage the best soldiers in Europe in his interest; with this view he projected the setting up king Arthur's round table, and proclaimed a solemn tilting, to invite foreigners of courage and quality to the exercise; the place for this solemnity was fixed at Windsor, for which purpose, on New-Year's-Day, 1344, he published his royal letters of protection, for the safe coming and return of such foreign knights as were willing to hazard their reputation at this publick tilting, and ordering, that this entertainment should be held annually at the same place at Whitsuntide; all the knights, during this solemnity, were entertained magnificently at the king's expence, eating together at a table 200 foot diameter, which he called the round table; to countermine this project, Philip de Valois, the French king, made use of a similar expedient at his own court, inviting the martial men of fame and character, in Italy and Germany, for fear they should be pre-engaged to Edward; this thought proving successful, gave a check to king Edward's design. Edward having lately given his garter for the signal of a fortunate battle, he took occasion from thence to institute this order, making the garter the principal distinction of it; from whence that select number, whom he incorporated into a fraternity, is called Equites auratæ periscelidis, or knights of the garter. By this garter, the knights companions are symbolically put in mind to act by the maxims of good faith, sincerity, and religion, to push an enterprize with resolution, but not to undertake any thing contrary to the statutes of the order; not to violate the engagements of friendship, the law of arms, the privileges of peace, or to do any thing contrary to articles of probity and honour. This noble order was founded in the twenty-third year of the reign of king Edward III. Anno 1350; the patrons or protectors of it were the Holy Trinity, the Blessed Virgin, St.

St. George, and St. Edward the Confeſſor; and as it is the moſt noble, ſo it is the moſt ancient of any lay-order now in uſe in Europe; the number of the knights companions of the order are 25, beſides the king, the ſovereign of the order. To qualify a perſon for this honour, he muſt be a perſon of an unblemiſh'd character, not under the degree of knight, and one that cannot be charged with abetting a party or faction againſt his prince. He muſt be a gentleman born, that is, as king Henry VIIIth's ſtatutes explain it, a gentleman by name, arms and blood; ſo that no knight that has been convicted of hereſy, or treaſon, or can be charged with cowardice, is capable of being elected a companion of the order, and may forfeit it upon conviction after he is choſe; he is likewiſe liable to be degraded at the pleaſure of the ſovereign, if by libertiniſm and extravagancy he ſpends ſo much of his patrimony as renders him uncapable of maintaing his character honourably. The habit of the order upon ſolemn days, is the garter, mantle, ſurcoat, hood, collar, great George and cap; upon the collar-days they are only oblig'd to wear the garter, the collar of the order, and the great George; at the middle of the collar, hangs the picture of St. George, ſitting on horſeback, who having throwo the dragon upon his back, encounters him with a tilting ſpear; the garter, which is blue, was, at the foundation of the order, appointed to be worn a little below the knee of the left leg, which ſtill continues, having this motto wrought on it, Honi ſoit qui mal y penſe, which was made in French, becauſe at that time our king poſſeſſed the greateſt part of France, and was at war for the whole, and our laws were then in the French language, which was alſo univerſally ſpoke at the Engliſh court; beſides the 26 above mentioned, this college or corporation conſiſts of a dean and 12 canons, beſides petty canons, vergers, and other inferior officers; to which are added 26 poor knights, who have no other maintenance but the allowance of this college, which is given them in conſideration of their prayers, in behalf of the ſovereign and the companions, and by way of reward for their former ſervice in the field; there are alſo ſome conſiderable officers belonging to this order, as the prelate of the order, which is only an office of honour, without any profit annexed, and this is ſettled on the biſhoprick of Winchester. The chancellor of the garter, is the biſhop of Saliſbury for the time being. The office of regiſtry belongs to the deanery of Windſor; there is alſo an officer called garter principal king at arms, whoſe buſineſs is to manage and martial their ſolemnities at their inſtallation and feaſts. Laſtly, they have an officer called the black rod; the college is in the caſtle of Windſor, with the chapter-houſe, and chapel of St. George, built by king Edward III.

GE'OMANCER (S.) a practiſer, ſtudent, or profeſſor of geomancy.

GE'OMANCY (S.) a ſort of divination made by means of a number of ſmall dots or points made on paper at random, and by conſidering the various lines and figures which thoſe lines repreſent, or are imagined ſo to do, a judgment is formed, and the future ſucceſs of the querent is declared. From this account it is eaſy to judge to what a degree of ſtupidity and wickedneſs the practiſers or inquirers by this method muſt be arrived to, to give or take any aſſurance of ſucceſs from ſuch fooliſh, improbable, and impoſſible methods.

GEOMETRI'CIAN (S.) a perſon ſkilled in, or practiſing of geometry.

GEOME'TRICK or GEOME'TRICAL (A.) ſomething conſidered as, or actually belonging to the ſcience of geometry.

GEO'METRY (S.) ſtrictly means meaſuring the earth, but is now confined, and appropriated to the moſt noble of the mathematical ſciences, viz. the conſideration of continued quantity or ſenſible magnitudes, whoſe parts, though never ſo vaſt or remote, by its demonſtrations are exactly meaſured and underſtood; to which purpoſe it is divided into theorical and practical; the one conſiders the relation, proportion, and other affections of ſuch and ſuch figures, both plain and ſolid, without regarding the inconveniences that ariſe form friction, the difficulty or impoſſibility of making ſuch or ſuch forms perfectly, &c. and the other allows for the imperfection, or takes the figures for perfect, &c. and is called by various names according to the application; the painters repreſent geometry by a lady with a ſallow face, clad in a green mantle fringed with ſilver, and holding a ſilver wand in her hand.

GEORGE (S.) a proper name of a man, very common in England; alſo the patron ſaint of the kingdom, who is reported to have been a famous ſaint throughout all the eaſt, and called by the Greeks the great martyr; in Medals, Painting, &c. he is frequently repreſented on horſe-back well armed, and ready for an engagement; he is adored both in the Greek and Latin church, and England and Portugal have both choſe him for their patron ſaint: There have been various military orders under this denomination; that which in England is now called the order of the garter, was, till K. Edward the VIth's time, called the order of St. George; there is now one in Venice, the knights of which wear a chain of gold about their necks, at the bottom of which hangs a gold croſs enamelled with red, which croſs is likewiſe embroidered upon their cloaks; there are alſo ſeveral religious orders and congregations, particularly canons regular of St. George in Alga at Venice, Sicily, &c.

GEO'RGIC (S.) is ſome part of the ſcience of huſbandry put into a pleaſing dreſs, and ſet off with all the beauties and embelliſhments of poetry; and here part of the poet's ſkill lies in ſingling out ſuch precepts as are uſeful, and at the ſame time moſt capable of ornament; and as there is art in the choice of fit precepts, ſo the manner of treating them muſt be nicely and judiciouſly purſued. The method muſt be natural and unforced, that every thing may look eaſy, and ſtand in the beſt light; and where there are ſeveral ways of conveying the ſame truth to the mind, the poet muſt pitch upon that which is moſt diverting: Farther, the poet is not obliged to incumber his poem with too much buſineſs; but ſometimes to relieve the ſubject with a moral reflection, or let it reſt a while for the ſake of a pleaſant and pertinent digreſſion; but then theſe digreſſions muſt be ſomething of a piece with the main deſign of his Georgic, and have a remote alliance, at leaſt to the argument, that ſo the whole poem may be more uniform and agreeable. The ſtyle proper to a Georgic muſt be worked up with a great deal of thought and vigour, that the words may be lively and glowing, and that every thing the poet deſcribes may immediately preſent itſelf, and riſe up to the reader's view. He muſt be particularly careful not to let his ſubject debaſe his ſtyle, and betray him to a meanneſs of expreſſion, but every where to keep up his verſe in all the pomp of numbers and dignity of words. After this ſhort ſcheme of rules, it may not be improper to mention in a word or two, the different management of Heſiod and Virgil, in this kind of poetry: To begin with Heſiod; he is wonderfully grave, diſcreet, and frugal; he is always inſtructing his reader, avoids all manner of digreſſions, and does not ſtir out of the field, once in the whole Georgic; his method, in deſcribing month after month, with proper ſeaſons and employments, is too grave and plain, it takes off from the ſurprize and variety of the poem, and makes the whole look but like a modern almanack in verſe; it is true, his deſcriptions have abundance of nature in them, but then it is nature in her ſimplicity and undreſs; neither has he ſhewn more art and judgment in the precepts he has given us, which are ſown ſo very thick, that they clog the poem, and are often ſo minute, and full of circumſtances, that they weaken and enervate his verſe. On the other ſide, Virgil has ſo raiſed the natural rudeneſs and ſimplicity of his ſubject, with the ſignificancy of his expreſſion, the grandeur of his verſification, the variety of his tranſitions, and the ſolemn air in his reflections, that if we look upon both poets together, we ſee in one the plainneſs of a downright countryman, and in the other ſomething of a ruſtick majeſty like that of a Roman dictator at the plough tail; he delivers the meaneſt of his precepts with a kind of grandeur; he breaks the clods, and toſſes the dung about with an air of gracefulneſs; his prognoſtications of the weather are taken out of Aratus, where we may ſee how judiciouſly he has picked out thoſe that are moſt proper for his huſbandmens obſervation, how he has enforced the expreſſion, and heightened the images which he found in the original: In ſhort, the Georgic has all the perfection of a poem written by the greateſt poet in the flower of his age, when his invention was ready, his imagination warm, his judgment ſettled, and all his faculties in their full vigour and maturity.

GEO'SCOPY (S.) a ſort of divination or foretelling the future fruitfulneſs of any land, by well obſerving the ſoil and other proper prognoſticks.

GE'RFALCON or GY'RFALCON (S.) a large bird of prey, next in ſtrength to an eagle.

GE'RMAN (A.) of the ſame ſtock, family, kindred, ſort, or kind, whether applied to men or things; ſo brother german is a brother both by father and mother's ſide, or one that has the ſame father and mother with another; couſin germans are thoſe, who are the children of brothers and ſiſters of the ſame father and mother; the ancient Romans permitted ſuch to marry, till the emperor Claudius, and the emperor Theodoſius forbad their marriage, under very ſevere penalties, and even fine and proſcription.

GRE'CISM (S.) a phraſe or ſentence ſpoke or wrote after the idiom, manner or true propriety of the Greek tongue or language.

GREECE (S.) a ſpacious country, now almoſt all ſubject to the Turks, ſaid to have taken its name from a certain king called Græcus; at firſt its extent was but ſmall, but in proceſs of time it grew very large: The natives and inhabitants were ſo renowned for their wit and courage, that people reſorted to them from all parts of the world, either to be inſtructed in the ſciences, or to learn the art of war, they being either the inventors or improvers of moſt arts and ſciences. They were the people who firſt ſubmitted to live regularly by ſtated laws; the Romans uſed to ſend the children of their noblemen to Athens, a principal city in Greece, for education, &c. At preſent, they are exceedingly degenerated from what they formerly were, being cowed or over-awed by the Turks, their preſent maſters, that both prieſts and laity are ſo miſerably ignorant, that they frequently abjure the Chriſtian religion, and embrace Mahometiſm, for the more quiet enjoyment of the conveniences of life, that were it not for the Chriſtian feſtivals, which are with great veneration obſerved, it is thought the Chriſtian religion would long before now have been eradicated out of the country. The Greek prieſts or prelates wear their hair long, and their pontifical and prieſtly habits differ from the Romiſh ones. The patriarch wears a dalmatick or long gown with ſleeves all embroidered, and upon his head a regal crown inſtead of a mitre. The biſhops wear a cap like the hollow of a hat without brims down to their ears. The prieſts do not uſe ſurplices or ſquare caps, but only albes, ſtoles, and copes; they carry a ſmall ebony ſtaff in their hand, tipped with ivory or mother of pearl. In the Sacrament, they uſe leavened bread, and adminiſter it in both kinds: They admit of no images in baſs relief or emboſſed work, but uſe paintings and ſculptures in copper or ſilver; they uſe no muſick in their churches. Their monks or coloyers, who are generally of the order of St. Chryſoſtom, lead very auſtere lives, eſpecially thoſe of mount Athos; they uſe the Septuagiant tranſlation of the Bible; and tho' they do not aſſert a purgatory, yet they pray for the dead, that God would have mercy upon them at the general judgment; they diſown the pope's authority, obſerve many holidays, keep four ſolemn faſts or lents in the year, wherein they abſtain from fleſh, butter, eggs, but permit the free uſe of fiſh, oil, and wine: Their ancient hiſtorians and poets were vaſtly addicted to tales and fictions, and their modern ones are given to viſions and extraordinary adventures.

H.

HIS the eighth letter in our alphabet, and the sixth consonant; the nice splitters of hairs have very much contested whether it is a letter or no, some calling it a mere aspiration or breathing; but in our language it is really, and to all intents, as much a letter as any other consonant is, as is evident from the following monosyllables, house, horse, here, &c. In the beginning of words it has always a vowel following it, but in the middle or towards the end it is frequently followed by a consonant; whenever it follows P, it is sounded together with it like an F, as in Philip, &c. Among the Ancients, it was a numeral, signifying 200; when a dash was added to the top, thus, H̄, it signified as many thousands.

HA'BEAS CORPUS (S.) the name of a writ, which a person indicted for a trespass before the justices of peace, or in a court of franchise, and imprisoned for it, may have out of the King's-Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, to answer the cause at the bar thereof. The order in this case is, first to procure a certiorari out of the court of Chancery, directed to the said justices, for removing the indictment into the King's Bench, and upon that to procure this writ to the sheriff, for causing his body to be brought at a certain day.

HA'BERDASHER (S.) the name of a trader in various small wares or goods, as thread, tape, ribbands, needles, pins, &c. also a seller of hats.

HABI'LIMENT (S.) all sorts of apparel or cloathing; and in War, all manner of necessary provisions, as armour, harness, utensils and ammunition, &c.

HA'BIT (S.) an inclination or disposition both of the mind and body, attained by a repeated exercising the same thing often over, by which a readiness or perfection in the performance, or a satisfaction in, or liking to the thing is acquired; it is also the name of the customary cloathing of any country or people, which in different countries are in different modes, but all make a very considerable difference between the men and the women; so that the sex is at once discoverable upon sight of the garments, cloathing, or habit; the Jews were strictly forbid the woman's wearing that which pertained to the man, and the man's putting on a woman's garment, which interpreters suppose was to keep them not only from all acts of impurity that might arise from such a disguise, but from the heathenish practice of certain superstitious ceremonies, which were performed at the festivals of Bacchus, Venus, Mars, and others, wherein the men dressed themselves like women, and the women like men. In the East, the men sacrificed generally to the moon in womens cloaths, and the women in mens, because this planet was adored under the name both of god and goddess, and was affirmed to be of both sexes; the custom of most nations is to distinguish persons by their habits; so with Us, a clergyman, lawyer, magistrate, &c. have distinct sorts of habits, in which others appearing, are esteemed cheats.

The royal family of France had it as a particular mark and privilege of the kings and princes of the blood, to wear long hair, artfully dreſſed and curled; ſome writers affirm that the ſeveral degrees of men among them were known by the cut of their hair, and if a ſon of France had his hair cut, it was a publick declaration that he was excluded from the crown; but in proceſs of time, this extravagance changed into another, and every one was forbid wearing long hair, under penalty of excommunication. Many uſes are made of hair, or what is commonly called wool, as cloth for mens clothes, hats, &c.

HE'RBAL (S.) a treatiſe or book that handles or discourses upon the construction of the parts, and all the known virtues and properties of herbs; and sometimes it is taken for a collection of various sorts of them, pasted into a book to compare the definition and thing together, in order to understand and know every herb upon sight. The method of preparing them is thus; the flowers, leaves, &c. being gathered perfectly ripe, and in their true colours, are to be spread on brown paper, with the parts all display'd as distinctly as may be. If the stem or the body of the flower, &c. be thick, one half to be pared away to make it lie flat; this done, put another sheet of brown paper over them, and then put the whole between two iron plates screwed tight together, and thus pressed, bake them in a slack oven for two hours; when taken out, wash them over with a mixture of brandy and aqua fortis, and lay them on fresh paper to dry; when dry, smear or lick the backsides over with a brush dipped in a dissolution of gum dragon, to make them stick, and spread or lay them in a paper book prepared for that purpose, where they will lie fast, and always look fresh.

HO'LINESS (S.) purity, innocency, ſanctity, ſacredneſs.

HO'LLAND (S.) the name of the chief of the United Provinces, with the title of Earldom, and upon that account people in common call the whole ſeven by this name; ſuppoſed to take its name from two Teutonick words, Hol and Land, that is, hollow ground, becauſe of the multitude of rabbit holes in ſeveral places; it is a peninſula, having the ſea on the weſt, the eaſt, and the north, and the river Mauſe, Brabant, and Biſhoprick of Utrecht on the ſouth; formerly called Batavia; the ſoil is ſo ſoft and mooriſh, that it cannot be ploughed; in many places there are nothing but meadows, which are preſerved from the ſea by ſtrong banks that are continually kept in repair; the beſt part of north Holland has been taken out of the ſea; the air is rather hot than cold; it contains 29 walled towns, and many that were ſo formerly, which are not ſo now, but ſtill retain their ancient privileges, beſides 400 villages; the Dutch are naturally of good humour, laborious, cunning politicians, deſirous of riches, and ready to undergo any difficulties for gain or liberty; they are grown very rich, and have many learned men among them, which the univerſity of Leyden breeds them; they have abundance of manufactures, eſpecially linen and woollen cloth; their trade of butter, milk, cheeſe and ſaltfiſh is great, but that of herrings moſt conſiderable; their general way of living is frugal, private families buy an ox, or half an one about November, according to their number of mouths, which they ſalt and dry in their chimnies for ſummer, and then eat it with butter and vinegar; in winter they boil a piece of beef every Sunday, which ſerves the whole week with fiſh, milk, and all kinds of garden-ſtuffs; all theſe things pay taxes or exciſe; and it is obſerved, that there is not a cow of nine years old, ſold for 20 crowns, but what has already paid 21 crowns exciſe, and that every diſh of meat pays the exciſe above 20 times before it comes to table; yet though they are ſuppoſed to pay more taxes than any people, none live more happily, which proceeds from their trading, ſobriety, and labourious genius; formerly only ſix towns in this province ſent deputies to the ſtates; but William I. prince of Orange, increaſed the number to 18, which it now enjoys; the nobles all together have but one vote, and ſend 12 deputies out of their body to the ſtates of the province; but notwithſtanding they are very conſiderable in the government, becauſe entruſted with the beſt places, civil and military, and the church-revenues all ſeized on by the ſtate upon change of religion; they have alſo the firſt vote in the aſſembly of the ſtates, and power to name a counſellor in the two great courts of judicature. The penſioner of Holland, who is a learned man in the laws and cuſtoms of the country, and able to make ſpeeches upon publick occaſions, ſits next to the deputies in all the aſſemblies of the province; he propoſes the affairs, receives advices, and puts the resolutions taken into a method; the deputies of the towns are chosen out of the magistrates and senators, their number is uncertain, according to the customs and pleasures of the towns, because each town has but one vote, though the deputies may be 8, 10, or 12, &c. These are several places called New-Holland; there is also a division of Lincolnshire in England called Holland. Sir William Temple sums up their character, and says, it is a country where the earth is better than the air, and profit more in request than honour, where there is more sense than wit, more good nature than good-humour, and more wealth than pleasure, where a man would rather chuse to travel than to live, and will find more things to observe than desire, and more persons to esteem than love.

HO'LLAND (S.) a curious sort of linen, principally the manufacture of the province of Holland, Friesland, &c. whence it is named; the principal mart or staple of this cloth is Haerlem, whither it is sent from most other places as soon as wove, to be whitened, &c. it is wove of various widths and fineneſſes, according to the purpose intended for; that for shirting, commonly called gulix Holland, a yard wide; that for sheeting and aprons, wider; the Friesland Holland is esteemed the strongest and best of any others, being never callendered nor whitened with pap, like the others, but imported just as it comes from the whitster, and is a yard, quarter and half wide.

HO'LLOW (A.) any thing that has an empty space or cavity in the inside, any thing that is not solid; and sometimes spoken of a deceitful, treacherous person.

HO'LY (A.) sacred, divine, pure, innocent, free from all manner of pollution, and is frequently added to many things according to the design, use, or purpose of it; it is much used by the churchmen as a common appellative to all they are concerned in, as holy orders, holy office, holy life, holy professions, &c. in Scripture, it is the peculiar character of God, where he is called the holy one of Israel, &c.

HO'LY GHOST (S.) the third person in the Trinity, by which is meant the divine power and spirit of God, sanctifying, assisting, and influencing mankind, in performing those spiritual duties of sincere prayer and praise, whereby the faith and practice of the good and obedient are strengthened, confirmed and made acceptable. The extravagance of mankind has run so far as to erect military orders under this name, as that in France, instituted by Henry III. in 1569, in memory of three great events happening on the same day, viz. his birth, accession to the crown of France, and election to that of Poland; it is to consist of 100 knights only, who, to be admitted, are to make proof of their nobility for three descents; the king is grand master, or sovereign, and takes the oath, as such, on his coronation day, whereby he solemnly vows to maintain, for ever, the order of the Holy-Ghoſt. The knights are all to wear a gold-croſs, hung about the neck by a blue ſilk ribband or collar; the officers and commanders are to wear a croſs ſewed on the left ſide of their cloaks, robes, or other upper garments; before they receive this order, that of St. Michael is conferred as a neceſſary degree; for which reaſon their arms are ſurrounded with a double collar; in Heraldry, a croſs of the Holy-Ghoſt conſiſts of a circle in the middle, on it a dove; the four arms are drawn narrow from the center, and widening to the ends where the returning lines divide each of them into two ſharp points, upon each of which is a pearl.

HO'LY-WELL (S.) in Flintſhire, North-Wales, which though it be not a market-town, yet is very populous, and of late years much encreaſed in buildings; in this town is the famous well, called St. Winnifred's well, which the ſuperſtition and deſigning craft of former times ſay, was thus occaſioned, That a prince of the country raviſhed this virgin, and becauſe he could not pacify her out-cries, he cut off her head, the blood of whoſe neck became this ſpring, from whence they attribute great virtue to it, and many enſigns of credulity ſtill remain there, as crutches, &c. Over the head of this ſpring or well is a curious chapel, built of free-ſtone, and in the chancel, on the glaſs window, is lively pourtrayed the whole hiſtory of St. Winnifred, and how her head was ſet on again by St. Bruno. In the well grows a ſort of moſs, exceeding ſweet to the taſte, and pleaſant to the ſmell, which is called St. Winnifred's hair: The ſtream of this well is continual, and ſo ſtrong, as to form a ſmall river, that drives a large mill; the country people are ſo ſtrongly tinged with this legend, that though moſt of them are proteſtants, yet they generally believe this ſtory to be true, with abundance more added to it.

HO'MAGE or HO'MMAGE (S.) the reverence, reſpect, and ſubmiſſion, that an inferior ſhews or owes to a ſuperior; and in Law, ſignifies an engagement or promiſe of fidelity, which a vaſſal or tenant, who holds a fee, pays or makes to a lord, when admitted thereto.

HO'MESPUN (A.) uncultivated, unimproved, unadorned by dreſs or education, plain, mean, &c.

HO'MEWARDS (Part.) going or moving towards home.

HO'MICDE (S.) the act of killing or murdering a man, which is divided into voluntary and caſual; the firſt is that which is deliberate, and committed with a ſet purpoſe and mind to kill, called murder; the ſecond is purely accidental, and is called chance-medley; among the Greeks, this crime was tried at Athens by the Areopagites; the proſecutor was obliged to ſwear, that he did nothing out of malice, and to curſe himſelf and family in a moſt terrible manner, if he knowingly miſinformed the court: There was no puniſhment aſſigned to perjury in this caſe, the criminal being left to divine vengeance, for they did not queſtion, but the gods would take care to do right to their own honour. If the proſecutor had not one fifth part of the bench for him, when judgment was given, he was fined a thouſand drachmæ, that is about 31*l.* ſterling. On the other hand, the perſon accuſed ſwore himſelf innocent of the charge; this being over, both parties pleaded for themſelves, but were not allowed to flouriſh or move the paſſions, but upon the firſt offer or harangue, they were ſilenced; they ſpoke and anſwered by turns; the indicted perſon, after he had made his firſt defence, had the liberty of baniſhing himſelf without any interruption, though he were guilty; the laſt part of the trial was called criſis; the Areopagite judges gave in their verdict, which was a ſentence (they being both jury and judges too) made by balloting; having firſt ſacrificed and worſhipped the gods, and taking the ballots they were to uſe, from the altar, they were ſtrictly tied up to the letter of the law. If the priſoner eſcaped capital puniſhment, he was obliged to ſacrifice to Pluto, Mercury and Tellus, whoſe ſtatues ſtood in the court; the puniſhment, if guilty, was death, and the murderer was to be executed in the ſame place, where the fact was committed; farther, all homicides forfeited all the privileges of the ſociecy, the day they were indicted, but no perſons might offer any injury to their perſons. He that killed another at any publick exerciſe or trial of ſkill, or one that lay perdue to do another miſchief, or was taken with another man's wife, mother, ſiſter, daughter, or concubine, or him that without ground or reaſon aſſaulted another, and was killed by a third perſon in defence of the injured perſon, was not deemed an homicide, if he proved the provocation fairly in court. Among the Jews, wilful murder was capitally puniſhed, but for chance-medley the offender was to fly to one of the cities of refuge, where he was obliged to continue, till the death of the high prieſt. In the primitive Church, before the Chriſtians had the civil power, they who were guilty of wilful murder, were put under a twenty years penance.

HO'MILY (S.) as now uſed and underſtood, ſignifies a ſermon or diſcourſe upon ſome head or point of religion, commonly done in a plain manner, for its being more eaſily underſtood by the common people, of which, at the time of the reformation here in England, there were ſeveral made and printed, and ordered to be read in thoſe churches, that were not furniſhed with a ſufficiently learned miniſter, to compoſe ſermons or proper diſcourſes themſelves, and alſo as a prevention of unſound doctrine, being taught in the more remote and leſs frequented country places; but in the primitive Church, it rather meant a plain conference by way of queſtion and anſwer, which was commonly done by the biſhop till the fifth century, when the learned prieſts were allowed to preach, catechize, &c. in the ſame manner as the biſhops uſed to do.
